Nixon Team Faked Ad

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon's re-election committee financed an elaborate campaign last May to give a distorted view of the U.S. public's response to the mining of Haiphong harbor, it has been learned.

The campaign included paying for telegrams to be sent to the White House and the placing of a deceptive, apparently illegal $4,400 ad in the New York Times on May 17.

On May 10, White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler said that telegrams, letters and telephone calls were running 5 or 6 to 1 in support of the president's action and cited them as an indication of "substantial support" of the mining.

One former Nixon campaign official said Tuesday that the Committee for the Re-election of the President was "totally mobilized for the biggest piece of deception — we never do anything honestly. Imagine, the president sending himself telegrams, patting himself on the back."

ENTIRE STAFF

Another former Nixon campaign official said that the Haiphong mining campaign "put the entire staff in overdrive for two weeks . . . the work included petition drives, organizing rallies, bringing people in buses to Washington, organizing calls to the White House, getting voters to call their congressmen."

"We felt the Haiphong decision could make or break the president," the official said.

Apparently among the participants in the drive were at least two of the Watergate conspirators, Frank Sturgis and Bernard Barker.

The two, according to sources in Miami, showed up uninvited at a Cuban exile meeting and attempted to take over plans for organizing a demonstration there in support of the mining.

Sturgis later told a Washington Post reporter that he drove the lead truck in a convoy that participated in the demonstration.

$100 BILLS

At least $8,400 in cash campaign funds, mostly in $100 bills, was spent on the drive. This expenditure has not been reported to the General Accounting Office as required by law.

The expenditures were authorized by Jeb Stuart Magruder, who was deputy Nixon campaign manager under John Mitchell at the time, according to government sources.

Magruder reportedly has told prosecutors that he, along with former attorney-general Mitchell and presidential counsel John Dean, had approved the bugging of the Democrat's Watergate headquarters.

The ad in the New York Times, entitled The People vs. The New York Times, criticized a Times' editorial opposing the mining.

The ad was signed by 10 people and gave the appearance of representing citizens' support of the president's controversial decision.

Philip Joanou, the former executive vice-president of the November Group, which handled the Nixon committee's advertising, said Tuesday that the ad was paid for with 44 $100 bills sent from

10% HIKE SEEN IN GAS PRICE

Times News Services

A Montreal oil company executive said Tuesday he expects gasoline prices across Canada to increase by 10 to 12 per cent in the near future.

M. R. Boyer, vice-president of marketing for Calex, said transport costs have increased by 300 per cent in the past 15 months.

During this period, his company had to increase the price of gas by three cents a gallon.

He said he expects other major gasoline marketers to make further increases soon.

J. E. Jarrell of Shell Canada said that although his company has not yet raised its prices, it will soon reduce the amount of subsidies allowed to dealers in certain regions of Quebec and the Ottawa Valley where price reductions were instituted a short time ago.

In Vienna, 11 of the world's oil-producing countries have issued a 10-day ultimatum to the Western companies that market their oil to come up with a formula to break a price deadlock.

In the U.S., Sun Oil Co. announced Tuesday in Philadelphia that it will immediately begin rationing gasoline supplies for dealers, distributors and commercial customers.

Sun, the 10th largest U.S. oil company, said a shortage of crude oil forced it to put a "gasoline allocation system" into effect.

PRITTIE WINS POST

Burnaby Mayor Bob Prittie, a former New Democratic Party member of the House of Commons, has won a civil service competition for the post of assistant deputy minister in the department of municipal affairs.

Municipal Affairs Deputy Minister W. K. Smith said today Prittie won the position over some 50 other applicants, 20 of whom were from within the B.C. civil service.

Prittie will resign as mayor of Burnaby to take the new position.

Dry Spell . . . Ready For Worst

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

The price tag on the dry spell could be a whopper on Vancouver Island and other parts of the province.

Ruinous forest fires, dead fish, poor crops and dry wells may be the cost of below-average rain and snow since October.

Precipitation recorded at Gonzales for the seven-month period was 7.44 inches below average. At Victoria International Airport it was 3.24 inches below average.

So far this moisture precipitation at Gonzales is .53 inches below average and at the airport, .29 inches below.

Except for December, when torrential downpours on the holiday weekend changed the balance, each month's recordings since last October have been below average.

Forestry officials, conservationists and farmers Tuesday predicted serious trouble if the unusually dry conditions prevail too long.

A spokesman for the B.C. Forest Service said it's going to be a "dicey" forest fire season.

"We're hoping for the best but preparing for the worst."

Because of the record fall of snow and rain that preceded it, he said the 1972 season had been an unusually light one.

"It was a good year," he said, "with only 1,903 fires, compared to 1970 when, because of conditions similar to those we face now, there were more than 4,000 fires."

Even in the "good year," fires consumed an estimated 64,400 acres, costing the department about $2.3 million and another $1.7 million outlay by the industry and other agencies.

He said the 1970 figures were staggering — 260,958 acres burned out, a cost of $9,166,167 to the department plus several millions by the industry and others.

"It may well be a grim summer," the spokesman added. "The rivers and streams are very, very low. We have arranged for chartered water bombers and patrol craft. This could well be a bad one."

He said several fires have already been fought, some of them small, but still providing "some pretty tell-tale facts." The forest season officially begins Tuesday.

Concern for the drying-out streams was also voiced by

POWER SHORTAGE LOOMS

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba Hydro is preparing for a power shortage next fall and winter, hydro chairman Len Bateman told the legislature' public utilities committee Tuesday.

Bateman said this will be "an expensive year" in terms of thermal power generation that will be required to make up for lack of water power due to dry conditions.

Hydro is working to get its thermal generating stations into first-class condition for the winter.

Bateman said the entire power situation is being reviewed, and hydro will decide soon whether to increase Lake Winnipeg's level by blocking one of its Nelson River outlet channels, possibly by sinking barges in it.

This would increase the lake's water table to provide water for winter release through the Nelson River power dams.

Manitoba Hydro also is surveying the province's neighbors to see what can be done in terms of buying outside power, Bateman said.

Chaos Ahead

TOKYO (UPI) — Labor unions today called a 72-hour general transportation strike for Thursday, one day ahead of schedule, threatening to plunge Japan in its worst economic chaos in decades.

A commuter revolt against a showdown by railroad workers Tuesday led to bloody rioting at dozens of stations.

Scores of passengers and railroad employees were injured and 130 arrested by about 18,000 riot police.

About six million passengers were affected as 13 of Japan's rail lines suspended service because of damage.

Thursday's walkout will include government employees, communications workers and employees of Japan Air Lines and All Nippon Airways. The general walkout seemed inevitable after Premier Kakuei Tanaka's government refused to accept civil servants' demands for the right to strike by government employees.

HEY GEORGE! THEY'LL YELL

OCEAN SHORES, Wash. (UPI) — The city fathers of this town have declared Friday as "Undiscovery Day," marking the 181st anniversary of the day Capt. George Vancouver sailed past Ocean Shores without discovering it.

Vancouver was en route to Nootka Sound, on Vancouver Island. To celebrate "Undiscovery Day," residents will go to the beach at midnight and yell in unison, "Hey George!"

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP)— Two employees of Brinks Express Co. of Canada Ltd., wanted in connection with the theft of $700,000 from the company's vault, have a $10,000 price on their heads today. Convictions are not a prerequisite for the reward offered by Brinks.

LONDON (UPI) — A British jet airliner carrying 83 passengers to Mauritius was forced to land by fighter planes in Somalia, East Africa, today. Local Somalia radio said the passengers were welcomed by the minister of tourism before being taken to a hotel.

Navy Aid Sought

LONDON (UPI) — Angry British fishermen sought talks today with the government that may include a plea for naval support following the latest clashes in the "Cod War" between British trawlers and Icelandic gunboats. Political sources said the British government was taking the incidents very seriously, but remained opposed to the navy being called in to protect the trawlers.

MILAN (Reuter)—Rightwing political extremists bombed Communist and Socialist party buildings here as Italy prepared to mark the 28th anniversary today of its liberation from Nazi domination. Nobody was hurt in the attacks.

Work Beats Welfare —Levi

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Most people would rather work than be on welfare, B.C. Social Services Minister Norm Levi told a federal-provincial conference here today.

He cited the need for flexibility in social assistance programs to allow provinces to determine the needs of their people and urged the federal government to speed up a timetable to increase Canada Pension Plan benefits and a guaranteed minimum income for the disadvantaged.

Alberta agreed with federal proposals to beef up current plans, but advocated holding the line on suggestions for a universal guaranteed annual income and other broad approaches to social assistance.

In a position paper, Alberta Health Minister Neil Crawford said he supported the concept that individuals are responsible to themselves, their families and society to provide a living.

Increases in family allowance benefits, Canada Pension Plan provisions and income supplements to handicapped and disabled should be provided only for those incapable of taking care of themselves.

But the three Western New Democrat administrations — Manitoba and Saskatchewan as well as British Columbia stressed the need for a broad overhaul of present patchwork social assistance plans.

"Some of us are prevented by our political ideologies from doing anything," Levi said in an obvious dig at more conservative governments.

But "men of good will" should be able to come up with a workable system that would alow people a decent and dignified living.

Len Taylor of Saskatchewan said economic poverty "can and ought to be ended" in the country immediately.

He called for new approaches to the whole area of social welfare policy and said he hoped federal proposals to change the system would not get bogged down in discussion.

"While we sit and talk, many of our people suffer."

Welfare Minister Rene Toupin of Manitoba, in the most political statement, called for a federal policy of full employment together with a stronger social security system.

His government's programs to redistribute income, provide low-income housing and create jobs had helped keep the province's unemployment level low, he said.

Quebec's Claude Castonguay said any review of welfare systems should not set up distinctions between persons able to work, those unable to work and the rest of the population.

If programs were set up that enabled directors to classify benefit recipients it would be a fundamental departure from the approach that Quebec would like to see, he said.

Reds At Edge Of City

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH — Hundreds of refugees poured across the Mekong River to Phnom Penh today as Communist forces occupied positions directly opposite the city.

Refugees said the Communists were digging bunkers on the river bank at the village of Arei Khsat, only 1.7 miles from the centre of the capital.

Observers said the Communists could make use of the river bank as a superb site from which to shell the capital if they were able to hold out there until darkness.

Cambodian planes bombed and strafed the village throughout the afternoon as crowds gathered on this side of the river to watch the air strikes.

By late afternoon, the din of fighting between ground troops was still going on and could be clearly heard here.

Reports of the Communist advance followed an announcement Tuesday night by Cambodian President Lon Nol that he will share power with three of his chief anti-Communist opponents.

Nol said he is creating a "high political council" made up of himself and the three most important opposition politicians — former premier Sisowath Sirik Matak; In Tam, former president of the National Assembly; and Cheng Heng, who was chief of state after the coup three years ago in which Nol and Sirik Matak overthrew Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

MALARIA STRIKES VIET CANADIANS

By JAMES ANDERSON
Times Correspondent

SAIGON — An isolated outpost on a Viet Cong-controlled area of South Vietnam's Central Highlands has become a major medical headache for the International Commission of Control and Supervision.

Malaria has struck three Canadian and four other truce observers in the past two months at Duc Co, a former U.S. special forces camp near the Laotian border 225 miles northeast of Saigon.

Two of the Canadian officers have been sent home.

The problem is expected to get worse with the arrival of the rainy season in the next few months.

Falciprum malaria, the variety involved at Duc Co, causes a high fever which spurts up every three days.

Col. P. K. Tucker, chief medical officer of the Canadian contingent, says that it takes at least 19 days to cure the disease. Treatment requires large doses of quinine and other drugs which are fairly toxic in themselves.

The debilitating, mosquito-borne fever, caused by a parasite which attacks the red blood cells, is endemic in the area and proboably widespread among the Communist forces around Duc Co.

The disease can sometimes recur periodically for the rest of the victim's life. It can be fatal in a small fraction of cases even if treated promptly.

Although the Canadians in such areas take pills every day to help ward off the disease, Col. Tucker says the only real answer would be an effective mosquito control program.

Teachers Hire Women's Protector

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — A full-time protector and promoter of women's rights in education will be appointed by the B.C. Teachers' Federation.

In a move that symbolizes support for a task force report which has found discrimination against women in all levels of education, the BCTF annual convention in Vancouver voted Tuesday to hire the extra staff member for a two-year term.

The staff member may be a male or female.

The 600 convention delegates approved five of seven major recommendations of the task force after more than two hours of debate that stirred more laughter, more booing and more emotion than any other on the agenda. (Other stories on Page 3.)

Greatest antagonism was aroused over a recommendation that, when all other qualifications are equal, females should be appointed to administrative posts in preference to males "until an equitable distribution of men and women in administrative positions exist."

The recommendation was soundly defeated.

In defending that motion, task force chairman Dorothy Glass told delegates that statistics overwhelmingly prove that men are preferred to women in positions of authority and strong action must be taken to correct this injustice.

Both men and women teachers strongly disagreed with Glass, calling the motion "reverse discrimination" which would exchange one form of sexual prejudice for another.

Much of the debate over appointment of full-time women's rights workers revolved around finances but one male teacher closed that discussion when he asked: "Do you really think spending one per cent of our budget to improve the status of 53 per cent of our membership is too much?"

One Victoria teacher, Corrie Reagan, was well-received in a long speech opposing the whole principle of the status of women report.

Reagan, a teacher at Esquimalt Senior Secondary School and a past-president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, said appointment of a special women's worker would split the federation.

If specific cases of discrimination are found, she said, the teachers' federation as a whole should use the Human Rights Act to fight the specific case.

After much argument the convention supported a recommendation advising the department of education and local school boards that the BCTF is concerned about textbooks and other materials "that consistently show women and men in stereotyped roles."

Many teachers, especially at the secondary level, opposed the motion saying it constituted "censorship" and "book burning."

It would involve, they said, exclusion of many literary masterpieces from school libraries and English courses.

Other motions recommended that every school board in B.C. examine the status of female students and teachers in their district and called for a BCTF program to ensure that "the problem of social and sex stereotyping" be examined in the training of teachers, guidance counsellors and librarians.

The other defeated recommendation called for research to determine if, and why, fewer girls than boys participate in sports programs at the school level.

The BCTF task force on the status of women has been working for more than two years and presented the convention with an 18-page report outlining 46 specific recommendations to improve the position of women in B.C. education.

HIGH-LIVING MDs FACE AXE

TORONTO (CP) — Some Ontario doctors earning high incomes will have their fees reduced after May 1, the Ontarion College of Physicians and Surgeons said Tuesday.

The college said it is devising a formula "which will result in a reduction of payments to certain physicians whose pattern of practise indicates the quality of service is less than acceptable."

The college's medical review committee has been examining the practices of doctors with high gross earnings for several months. It said it has found that when doctors get too busy the quality of the care they give deteriorates.

The number of doctors billing the medical care plan for more than $10,000 for one month's work last June was reported at 465.

In April, 1972, the first month all billings came under the medical care computer, 362 doctors were submitting bills of more than $10,000. Of those, 56 were general practitioners.

The college said that aroused fears that doctors who earned such high amounts were not giving patients enough of their time to constitute good care.

The college said it would publish the "quality service payment formula" as soon as it is available and will notify the doctors who are most likely to be affected.

City Teacher Elected

Victoria teacher Bill Broadley today was elected first vice president of the B.C. Teachers' Federation.

Broadley, who ran on a moderate platform, will serve under new federation president Jim MacFarlan, a Burnaby teacher.

Broadley received 417 votes on the second ballot, compared to 211 votes for Gary Onstad, of Burnaby.

MacFarlan's victory over three other presidential candidates was clinched in the first ballot with an overwhelming 445 votes.

Broadley, a teacher at Mount View Secondary School and long-time active member of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, made no speeches after his election but promised the convention delegates he would work with the executive to carry out policies desired by all teachers.

Mob Stones House Of Irish Peace Worker

BELFAST (UPI) — A mob of cursing teen-agers today terrorized a Roman Catholic housewife who has been active in efforts to promote peace. The mob shattered windows in her Londonderry home and hit her 16-month-old son with a rock, police said.

In Belfast, a sniper shot and critically wounded a soldier as he patrolled the Catholic Ballymurphy district, an army spokesman said. The shooting followed another sniper attack on a woman member of Britain's security forces, the first attack intentionally directed at a woman in nearly four years of sectarian violence.

The teen-agers surrounded the Creggan estate home of Mrs. Margaret Doherty shortly after midnight and threatened to burn down the house unless she turned on the lights.

"When we put the lights on, bottles and stones started to fly," her husband, Liam, said. "The language they used was terrible."

Several stones crashed through the windows and one hit their baby on the head. He was not injured seriously.

"The pressure on us and other peace workers has been building up," Mrs. Doherty said. "They want to terrorize us into stopping."

The incident came on the third day of a limited seven-day truce called by the Irish Republican Army in Londonderry.

. . . FAKED AD

the Nixon committee in Washington.

The Times' editorial had termed the President's action in mining the harbors as "counter to the will and conscience of a large segment of the American people."

The advertisement, covering nearly half a page, cited polls showing that anywhere from 50 to 76 per cent of the people supported the President.

"Who can you believe The New York Times or the American people?" the advertisement asked.

Joanou said Tuesday that the November Group, which was set up exclusively to handle Nixon advertising spent more than $6 million for ads during the campaign.

"But the New York Times ad is the only one I can recall in which we made it look like a citizens' effort," Joanou said.

The cash fund which financed the Haiphong campaign also supplied approximately $750 that was paid to Theodore Brill, the head of the Republican organization at George Washington University.

Brill received the money to disrupt and spy on anti-war demonstrators camping in front of the White House last year, according to reliable sources.

OTHER ESPIONAGE

This fund consisted of about $13,000, the sources said, and about $3,300 of it was given to convicted Watergate conspirator Gordon Liddy for other espionage activities.

Nixon and his present White House chief of staff, H. R. Haldeman, were both officially cited by a California court in 1964 for having personally approved a similarly deceptive — and illegal — campaign tactic in Nixon's abortive 1962 campaign for governor of that state.

In that case, a dummy committee purporting to represent California Democrats mailed literature to Democratic voters that included attacks on Nixon's opponent, incumbent Gov. Pat Brown.

Although the mailing said, "this is not a plea for any candidate," a San Francisco judge ruled that its "paramount purpose . . . was to obtain" from registered Democrats votes and money for the campaign of Richard M. Nixon."

APPROVED PLAN

The court held that "Mr. Nixon and Mr. Haldeman approved the plan and project . . . and agreed that the Nixon campaign committee would finance the project."

During the 1970 mid-term elections, the White House was responsible for another deceptive advertising campaign, this one aimed at Democratic senatorial candidates who were attacked in newspaper advertisements supposedly placed by an independent citizens committee.

Those advertisements were conceived by then presidential special counsel Charles Colson.

Meanwhile according to information provided a federal grand jury Tuesday, Dean said prior to the bugging of the Watergate that the operation would have to be carried out in such a manner so that Mitchell would be able to deny his own involvement at a future date.

The allegation was made in a memorandum from convicted Watergate conspirator James W. McCord to the grand jury. McCord said he was told about Dean's statement by Liddy.

CLEAR CONSCIENCE

Mitchell said late Tuesday that his "conscience is clear" and he does not expect to be indicted in the Watergate case.

Mitchell also said he had "fully, freely and frankly" answered all questions raised by a federal grand jury probing a secret contribution to a Nixon campaign fund allegedly linked to the case.

He would not divulge details of his testimony.

Queried about the possibility of being recalled by the jury, Mitchell said, "I expect not . . . I hope not."

The jury is investigating a $200,000 contribution made by New Jersey financier Robert Vesco in April, 1972, to the Committee to Re-Elect the President.

Vesco was under investigatin by the Securities and Exchange Commission at the time.

STANS' SAFE

According to the Washington Post, the $200,000, in $100 bills, was put in a safe in the office of Maurice Stans, the Nixon campaign finance chairman following a number of meetings involving Stans, Mitchell and a Vesco representative.

Money from the safe was allegedly "used" to finance the Watergate bugging operation, as well as other facets of the Republicans' alleged espionage campaign in 1972."

In another development, the White House says Nixon has made "no decision at all" on whether to fire top aides as a result of the Watergate affair.

Nixon spokesmen deny reports that State Secretary William Rogers has been asked to head shake-up of the White House staff.

RIETZ QUITS

Meanwhile the man picked by the White House last month to direct President Nixon's drive for a "new majority" in the mid-term Congressional election of 1974 quit suddenly Tuesday.

Ken Rietz, the 31-year-old head of Nixon's 1972 youth campaign, sent a surprise letter of resignation to Republican national chairman George Bush.

Bush had named Rietz as director of the committee's "new majority campaign for 1974" March 1. The selection of Rietz to head the semi-autonomous campaign unit had been understood at the committee and in the Republican party leadership to have been suggested by Nixon and Haldeman.

. . . DRY SPELL

Howard English, director of the B.C. Wildlife Association.

"The streams are drying up quite early this year," he said, "and smolts (coho fry ready to go to sea) have been trapped. The summer levels will be lower than usual. If underwater pasture areas for the seed disappear this could have a damaging effect on the coho run four years from now."

Although Saanich Peninsula farmers relying on natural springs for water may face difficulties, those hooked into the Greater Victoria Water District system can breathe easy — at least for this year.

Water commissioner Ron Upward said a 12-month supply is stored in the watersheds, enough for about 300,000 people.

"We'll be all right," he says, "providing we get rain next winter, even though enough water for 50,000 people is being used for the fish in Goldstream."

Precipitation figures all over the province are similar to those tabulated at the weather office in Victoria.

A weather office spokesman, while warning that long-range forecasts are not too reliable, said a 30-day outlook of the U.S. Weather Bureau charted "average precipitation and above-average temperatures" until mid-May.

Berry farmers on the Saanich Peninsula also are looking for rain.

Dixon Holloway, president of the Saanich Fruit Growers' Association, said: "If there's no rain soon we'll be hard pressed for moisture. But if it starts to get wet in June just when the harvest is on, it could hurt."

No Comment On Barrett China Trip

A spokesman in Premier Barrett's office had "no comment" today on reports that the premier is seeking an invitation to visit China.

The spokesman said anything he could say about the matter would be 'speculation.'

"It's just too early to say anything about it," he said.

It has been reported that Barrett has been seeking an invitation to China since his government's election last August. No response has been received from China, the spokesman said.

Teachers Seek Right To Strike

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Teachers in B.C. have agreed to seek the legal right to strike, but only over working conditions, with compulsory arbitration retained for salary negotiations.

Tuesday's compromise move sparked the longest and hottest debate so far at the B.C. Teachers' Federation annual general meeting.

The right-to-strike clause in cases of "intolerable" employment conditions, stirred much speculation over its possible implications, but BCTF executive member Peter Minshull stressed to delegates that the clause would apply only in "extraordinary and rare, exceptional circumstances."

He said also that delineation of those circumstances would be a "matter of negotiation with the provincial government."

The compulsory arbitration versus the right-to-strike issue finally was brought before the 600 convention delegates late in the afternoon after a procedural wrangle which saw suspension of convention rules to bring in the compromise motion.

The motion consisted of two parts which were debated and voted on separately.

The first, which passed by a wide margin after more than an hour of hot debate on the principle of the right to strike, calls for continuation of compulsory arbitration for "normal bargaining procedures."

The second, passed by only a slim majority, reads "that the right to strike is a fundamental right and, therefore, procedures should be established whereby teachers' associations have the legal right to withdraw services in cases where school boards or the provincial government unilaterally alter conditions of employment or fail to correct intolerable conditions of employment."

"It's fundamental that if we really want to go on strike, we will and the law can't stop us," Minshull told the teachers. "We need the law clarifiedsowe won't be breaking our contract."

The Public Schools Act does not now specify whether teachers have the right to strike.

Retiring BCTF president Adam Robertson said later in an interview the compromise was a "pragmatic" one, but the right-to-strike recommendation could be "potentially explosive" if local teachers' groups designate what conditions are intolerable.

The two recommendations, along with other resolutions on bargaining procedures recommended by the BCTF convention, will later be presented to the provincial government.

Asked if he thought the government would act on the right-to-strike clause, Robertson said: "I can't really see them accepting this. But in view of the peace offering by (Education Minister Eileen) Dailly, there is a chance."

Dailly who had been attending some sessions of the convention, already had left the meeting and was not available for comment.

Victoria's teacher delegation voted in favor of compulsory arbitration in normal bargaining and, in a free vote, most delegates voted in favor of the right-to-strike motion.

Debate on the first section of the motion centred around whether teachers as a "professional" organization should assume responsibility to avoid strikes, or whether teachers should take advantage of a fundamental right to withdraw services.

The majority who opposed to the motion argued that B.C. teachers have done well financially with compulsory arbitration; that school boards might welcome the strike clause as a means enhancing their own public image; that it might lead to yearly strike situations, and that teachers should take advantage of the "new era of co-operation."

Valuable Lessons Forgotten

Times Staff

VANCOUVER — B.C. educators are forgetting valuable lessons learned under the Social Credit government and are retreating to "entrenched positions behind closed classroom doors," says B.C. School Trustees' Association president Jack Smedley.

In another speech heralding the education policies of the new NDP government, Smedley told delegates at the B.C. Teachers' Federation convention "the prospects for change and progress in education have never been better."

Most importantly, he told delegates in a short address Tuesday afternoon, educators recognized the need for community support to run an effective school system.

VALUABLE FUNCTIONS

They also recognized "somewhat reluctantly", he said, "that people without teaching certificates can perform valuable functions other than cleaning chalkboards and collecting milk money."

Ovans Honored

Times Staff

VANCOUVER — After nearly 30 years as secretary general of the B.C. Teachers' Federation, Charles Ovans bid farewell Tuesday with a warning that the federation must continue to elect leaders who truly reflect the desires of B.C. teachers.

In accepting a special award from the federation, Ovans praised the work of retiring BCTF president Adam Robertson and appeared to be urging delegates at the annual teachers' convention to heed Robertson's call for an end to militancy.

Ovans who will retire in July began working for the teachers' organization in 1942 and, in a tribute to his long and dedicated service, both Robertson and Canadian Teachers' Federation general secretary, Norm Goble, called him the "architect" of the BCTF.

Ovans has been awarded $5,000 by the BCTF to prepare a manuscript on his experience and views on education in the province.

KISSINGER, DUC THO TO MEET IN PARIS

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — U.S. presidential adviser Henry Kissinger and Hanoi's Le Duc Tho, who negotiated January's Vietnam ceasefire agreement, will meet next month to discuss violations of the accord, the White House announced today.

The announcement for the Paris meeting came a day after the United States formally accused North Vietnam of "numerous and extremely serious violations" in South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia since the ceasefire went into effect and of preparing to open new infiltration routes into South Vietnam.

The United States at the same time rejected as "utterly groundless" Hanoi's charges that the Nixon administration and South Vietnam were guilty of "flagrant violation" of the settlement.

In Paris today South Vietnam and the Viet Cong presented radically different proposals for reaching a political solution to the continuing violence in South Vietnam.

At the eighth session of their deadlocked talks on the political stalemate that has succeeded the war, the Saigon government presented a 10-point program and the Viet Cong proposed a six-point solution.

Both called for new elections, but there was still wide divergence on the details.

The proposals came near the end of the 90-day deadline set by the Jan. 27 Paris peace pact for reaching agreement on political issues.

Nguyen Luu Vien, the South Vietnamese deputy premier, suggested signing a preliminary agreement April 27 as way of meeting the deadline despite continuing disagreement. But the Viet Cong rejected the whole South Vietnamese package.

The White House said arrangments for the Kissinger-Tho session would be set up at a Paris meeting later this week between William Sullivan, deputy U.S. assistant secretary of state for Asian affairs, and North Vietnamese foreign minister Nguyen Co Thach.

Kissinger and Tho last met in Hanoi Feb. 10-17 for what were described as talks aimed at reconstruction of Indochina and possible U.S. aid toward that effort.

Since then, President Nixon has expressed deep concern several times about Hanoi's willingness to live up to terms of the Jan. 27 ceasefire pact and the U.S. charges against North Vietnam Tuesday were seen as a major effort to bring about compliance.

In Tuesday's protest, the U.S. state department charged North Vietnam had sent 30,000 men and 400 armored vehicles into South Vietnam since the ceasefire.

Meanwhile Michel Gauvin, Canadian ambassador with the international peace supervisory force, repudiated today a series of sharp Communist attacks on his impartiality, branding them false and unfounded.

"The attacks are aimed at trying to discredit me and cast doubt on my objectivity," he told The Canadian Press.

"But they the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese cannot cite one example to justify such accusations other than my April 13 statement which they have distorted," he added.

Forced Membership Urged

VANCOUVER — All teachers in B.C. will be compelled to join the B.C. Teachers' Federation under a recommendation approved Tuesday by the BCTF annual convention.

The recommendation which must be approved by the provincial government, seeks to restore "compulsory automatic membership", taken away by the Social Credit government in 1971.

Compulsory membership was first established by the BCTF in 1947.

The issue was debated at length on the convention floor but a large majority of delegates voted in favor.

"I think there was a lot of politics behind it," BCTF president Adam Robertson said later, "because some members felt it had been taken away from them unjustly."

But Robertson and many supporters of the move agreed that the practical problems of dealing with a voluntary organization were a major factor in calling for compulsory membership.

BCTF executive members pointed out that thousands of dollars had been spent in the last two years keeping track of voluntary members.

More than 95 per cent of B.C. teachers belong to the federation.

In supporting the recommendation, Kelly Slater, chairman of the BCTF membership task force, said "to maintain control of the quality of education, we must control the quality of teachers."

Only with compulsory membership, the task force members said, can the federation apply any code of ethics to teachers."

Opponents of the legislation cited the United Nations Universal Declaration of Rights and the B.C. Human Rights Act and argued that free choice must be maintained. Unwilling members, they said would hinder the purpose of the federation.

The convention also approved without debate a recommendation that the BCTF continue as "the single organization for teachers in the B.C. public schools."

They agreed on a description of BCTF membership which would include administrators and supervisors of instruction previously excluded. Substitute teacher are not included in the resolution.

CANADA'S CUP OF TEA

Canada Cup Reserve is a new 6 year old Canadian whisky.

It is made by Canadian Schenley.

Over the last 28 years Schenley has built a reputation on quality. So Schenley puts its name on the line every time that name goes on a bottle.

To simply call Canada Cup Reserve "Canadian" isn't enough for Schenley. It must measure up to their standards of a Canadian whisky. Smoothness, lightness and a rich Canadian taste.

Under the supervision of Schenley's master distiller, over 12 different blends were developed and put through extensive taste tests. Only 6 years-aged whiskies from hand charred white oak casks were tested.

Only men skilled in the distilling art made the decisions. This wasn't a popularity contest but a careful search for supreme quality. Schenley Canadian Quality.

Finally a blend was chosen, one that could truly bear the name – Canada Cup.

Try new Canada Cup Reserve. Sip it slowly as a taster would.

We think you'll find it's your cup of tea.

Planning Versus Complaining

A reported new plan for the controversial Bay Village shopping centre on Menzies Street in James Bay is described as conforming to zoning and other regulations and therefore not requiring further city council approval. The original proposal, still a matter of court action, called for a highrise tower of 29 storeys, later reduced to 24. The new concept would be within the seven-storey limit now in favor.

Whether or not it would enhance the appearance of James Bay is another matter. Alderman Frampton, who has served as a chairman for Mr. J. A. Mace, the determined developer of the project, and now seems to be emerging as an interpreter of his thinking, is quoted as saying that whereas the highrise tower would have shut out only 15 per cent of the view, "this new design will block all views like a solid wall".

Victorians will remember the remark that surfaced during one of the city's confrontations with Mr. Reid, of the Wharf Street highrise project, to the effect that if a certain tower plan were not accepted there could be resort to a solid wall of lowrise buildings that would effectively screen the waterfront.

There is a serious lack of power in the city council in that it is unable to guard itself against situations in which it is open to the pressure of such proposals. The dilemma seems to be one of "give me permission for what I want or I'll produce a legal alternative that is much worse." It is hardly the atmosphere in which to plan a beautiful and usable city. The best interests of the community under such circumstances appear to be placed second or third instead of first.

A developer has a right to try to get the best deal, the greatest concessions and the biggest profits that he can. But it is the right, and the responsibility, of the public's representatives to see that development is directed toward the overall good of the community — and they should have the power to ensure that when a direct confrontation occurs, the community will win.

To guide city authorities in their decisions, there should be an overall plan for the community which will mean that many of the potential points of contention are settled far in advance — where highrises may be placed, how high they may go in various locations, how closely they may be sited, what traffic arteries and other essential services are possible, and so on. Too much of the time of councils is taken up in arguments with developers about what may be done. It could be better spent in setting up basic answers to such questions before they arise.

Agreement Is Still Delayed

Ottawa reports of failure by Canada and the United States to reach agreement on salmon fishing problems on the Pacific Coast are more discouraging than surprising. It is natural enough for the fisheries interests of each nation to seek as much as they can get in concessions from the other. In the bargaining, reaching agreement should not be viewed as an easy process spurred by magnanimity on both sides. Eventually, when each has reached the point at which it feels no further give-and-take is possible, accord may be reached on the basis of accepting what is feasible.

The disappointment arises from the example provided by these so-called "good neighbors." Canadians and Americans on the Pacific Coast enjoy a history of co-operation on fisheries. The historic joint action taken on halibut is a case in point, as is the earlier combined operation to improve the Fraser for migratory passage of salmon to and from spawning grounds—an operation now looked upon with diminishing favor by Canadians. Pacific Coast Canadian and American fishermen recognize the common danger posed by the intrusion of other foreign fishing fleets.

If these "friends" have so much trouble working out an equitable arrangement for fishing, what hope is there for amicable international arrangements involving all the other maritime nations? Iceland has its particular problems. Russia and Japan differ on fishing rights in the vicinity of the Kuriles. South American countries intermittently have their confrontations with United States fishermen.

At this point, prior to the launching of the next Law of the Seas conference, there are few indications of plain sailing to the goal of universally acceptable conservation agreements. National self-interests preclude any easy accord—and will do until the threat of destroying the fish resources jeopardizes those national self-interests.

Just Politics?

As Mr. Bennett's financial mentor, as former vice-president of the B.C. Railway and as the man held responsible for restricting an external audit on the line, Einar Gunderson demonstrates little more than reflex action when he calls B.C. Comptroller-General J. W. Minty's criticism of the railway's financial handling a "political report," and a red herring.

What else was he expected to do? Mr. Gunderson may not be the world's most successful politician when it comes to being elected, but he has been around for a long time handling certain chores for his friend, Mr. Bennett. If investigation in depth leaves the Comptroller-General less than satisfied with some aspects of the railway's accounting, what more natural than Mr. Gunderson's ploy to dismiss complaints as partisanship? Who should know more than he about that?

The Impatient Chasing the Invisible

JAMES RESTON

Inner Hinge of Watergate

WASHINGTON — Even after the courts and the Senate have passed judgment in the Watergate case, we will still not know what happened here unless we understand the mood and assumptions of the Nixon administration in which all these bizarre events occurred.

The mood was conspiratorial. Nixon has come to the pinnacle of American political life, but always against great odds. From the first, he has been a "loner," fighting against the established institutions of the Congress, the press, the civil service, and the universities — all of which he felt were hostile to him.

His assumptions, when he finally prevailed over all of them in one of the greatest personal triumphs in American history, were that they were still against him. So he isolated himself and concentrated power in his White House staff, which is now under attack.

Fear and Suspicion

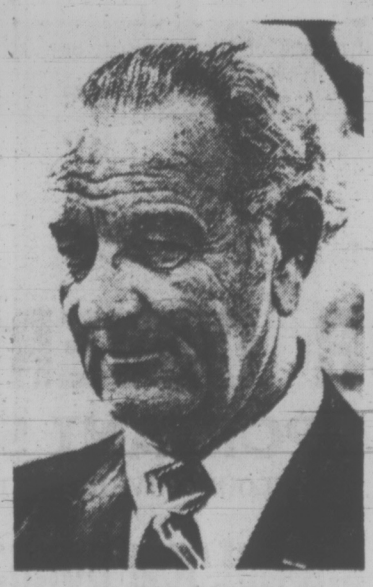
He reduced the power of the Cabinet. He talked publicly about the "bureaucracy" in Washington as if it were a foreign enemy rather than his servant and ally. Even after his spectacular victory in the presidential election last November, he defied the Congress to question his aides or appropriate funds he didn't want to spend, and assumed that the inquiries by the press into the Watergate case were not only frivolous but vicious, and maybe unpatriotic.

In short, fear and suspicion have been his companions. He had the example of President Johnson before him. Johnson had been drummed out of the White House by militant opponents of the Vietnam War. These same militants were still around and might try to defeat Nixon as they had defeated Johnson, and President Nixon was surrounded mainly by his friends on the White House staff, who shared his suspicions of the Congress, the bureaucracy and the press, and were loyal primarily to him.

This does not mean that the president knew about the Watergate conspiracy. He is too intelligent to approve such risks in an election against George McGovern which was never in doubt. Also, in fairness to him, he is too smart to get involved in raising funds laundered through Mexico, or recruiting CIA characters to bug Larry O'Brien's telephones in the Watergate.

But the main thing seems to have been missed here. It is that President Nixon did create the atmosphere of fear and suspicion in which others working for him apparently felt that they could use any means to assure his re-election. It is not good enough to convict the burglars at the Watergate, or even to identify the officials who approved it or knew about it, or paid for it. They obviously have to pay the price for breaking the law, but most of them were the victims rather than the originators of the crime that came out of the atmosphere of conspiracy in which they lived.

This is why McCord, Magruder and the others are beginning to tell the justice department, the grand jury and the



LYNDON JOHNSON
. . . they drummed him out

Senate investigating committee what happened. Aside from trying to save their own skins, they want it known that they were not acting on their own, but operating under instructions for reasons they thought were not only official but honorable — under the atmosphere that had been created by the president himself.

It is the old problem of ends and means. If the president thinks his Vietnam policy is right, and the Democrats are opposing him, with the aid of a lot of radicals who might disrupt the presidential election campaign, why not bug Democratic headquarters, and even sabotage the Democratic presidential candidates? All this must have seemed reasonable under the atmosphere of conspiracy which has dominated the Nixon administration.

Accordingly, even if John Mitchell, John W. Dean 3rd and Jeb Stuart Magruder, are indicted, the president's chief of staff, Bob Haldeman resigns — not because he knew what was going on but because he didn't protect the president — the problem will still exist.

For the root of the problem here is not criminal or even political but philosophical. Nixon can easily dump John Mitchell, John Dean, Magruder and all the rest, but unless he explains that they were not faithful to the ideals and atmosphere his administration created, they will insist that they were doing what they thought he wanted them to do, and he will still be in trouble.

President Nixon is already in difficulty on other fronts. He is in trouble with the economy, trade, labor, the price of food, and even with his own conservative colleagues like Barry Goldwater on the handling of the Watergate.

Other Troubles

And this comes at an awkward time for him and the country. Nixon has just begun his second term. He will preside over the republic for almost four more years, beyond the 200th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1976, and to do this effectively, he obviously needs the support and confidence he now lacks.

After the Watergate case is settled, after the White House staff is cleaned out and reorganized, Nixon will still need much more support from the public, the Congress and the press than he now has.

This will require a much different atmosphere than we have had during the last four years in Washington, and the president is in a much better position than anybody else to change it. Finding the culprits in the Watergate case won't do it. The problem is the atmosphere of fear and suspicion which made the Watergate tragedy possible, and this cannot be removed by removing Nixon's aides.

The atmosphere of distrust, almost of war between the president on the one hand and the Congress, the press and the civil servants on the other, has been the main problem in the last few years, and this will not be changed, even with a new White House staff, unless the president himself decides to change it.

BRUCE HUTCHISON

Crisis? What Crisis?

The only complete study of the North American energy situation has recently been provided by Professor Julius Brainworthy, the distinguished analyst of Harvard University but, as you would expect, the timid world press has refused to print it. By special arrangement his conclusions are reported herewith in a taped interview of questions and answers that summarize all the information available from the United States government and other trusted sources.

"Professor Brainworthy, is there an energy crisis in North America?"

"There is no crisis, except in the minds of excited journalists. There is merely a larger demand for energy than the supply and this temporary imbalance will soon be corrected by the price system."

"How?"

"When the price of oil and gas increases sufficiently it will finance the discovery of ample extra supplies. All the oil companies agree on that obvious proposition. Therefore it is essential for the public to use as much of these products as possible to raise the price and encourage production. The more we use the more we shall have. Even a journalist should understand that."

"But for the time being isn't it true that the United States depends on the Middle East for vital supplies of oil and must spend countless billions to buy them, if it can find the money, and if the Arab countries are willing to sell?"

Grossly Exaggerated

"This small difficulty has been grossly exaggerated. It will be easy to pay for adequate oil imports by doubling or quadrupling the exports of American manufactured goods. And if these competitive exports close the factories of Europe and Japan that will be a minor price to pay for the growth of the American economy."

"Is it true that the sheikhs of Arabia will soon hold enough gold, dollars and other reserves to blackmail the United States and buy up its industries?"

"No, it's not true. The sheikhs don't know how to save money. They don't want investments. They only want consumer goods. So they will squander all their money on American luxuries for the ladies in their harems and big limousines for themselves. For example, they will buy most of the output of the American automobile industry, thus stimulating our economic growth, reducing our own use of automobiles, our need of gasoline and our air pollution as well. They may not know it but the sheikhs are solving all our problems automatically."

"What of Russia? It has more than enough oil for its own use and a stranglehold on the politics of the Middle East. Isn't this dangerous?"

"No, it is not. Russia has no strategic designs against the Middle East or any nation. Moreover, its economy is in bad shape because the Russians don't understand modern business and can't even feed themselves. They will be glad to supply the United States with all the oil and gas we need on easy financial terms. If necessary, their generous government will give us foreign aid as it has done in Cuba and India. Perhaps we can't trust Europe but we can trust Russia."

PRESIDENT NIXON
. . . all planned

"Nevertheless, isn't it possible that there will be a definite shortage of gasoline and heating oil next winter?"

"Possibly a slight shortage, but it will benefit everyone. If Americans walk to work instead of driving, that will improve their health because they are physically soft. And if the temperature of their houses is reduced, that will effectively cool the heated state of public opinion, exactly as President Nixon planned from the beginning."

"Then why didn't the government foresee the shortage and prepare for it?"

"All the governments of the Western world foresaw everything. But they were too honest and responsible to tell the people, disturb them unnecessarily and interrupt their domestic peace. For reasons of national security the shortage was wisely kept as a state secret. In the best tradition of democracy, only foreigners were allowed to know the facts."

"Was the meat shortage also a state secret?"

"Of course. The government skilfully arranged the shortage to raise prices and encourage production. And as the secretary of agriculture says, the people can quickly overcome the shortage by eating less. They're too fat anyway. Ask any doctor. It will be a more healthy and happy America when meat is eaten once a week as in the ageless, indestructible civilizations of China and India. We have much to learn from those ancient cultures."

On the Contrary

"You mean that the North American living standard must fall?"

"On the contrary it will rise. The people may have less meat, gasoline and fuel next winter but the Gross National Product is rapidly increasing and that is all that really matters."

"By the end of the century the American population will increase by about 50 million. Won't that create a demand and supply problem?"

"No, it will not. After all, that increase is only the present population of Britain and it's doing fine. Surely Americans are just as smart as the British? So long as the GNP keeps rising it will take care of the population."

"So there's no problem?"

"Unfortunately there is one very serious problem. The public is recklessly wasting more energy worrying about energy than the whole economy uses to maintain the GNP. If the people would only stop worrying there would be nothing to worry about. The so-called crisis exists only in the irresponsible press and the arithmetic of the computers."

"What is your advice, then?"

"The people should trust the price system and avoid economic controls that would benefit no one but the consumer and, in the end, would ruin the highest living standard in the world by keeping prices too low and discouraging production. Yes, and let the people trust their governments. All the governments know what they're doing or we wouldn't have reached our present state of affluence, strength and general happiness."

Home Rule

Having been a taxpayer in Victoria for over thirty-five years I have often wondered why so many nitwit ideas came out of City Hall.

After reading through your list of names of members on City Boards and Committees it is very easy to understand. The City is directed by people who prefer to live outside the City and hold their own taxes down!

There is little wonder why, if you write City Hall on a problem, you can't get a good reply. These people don't care about people who live in Victoria. Their only worry is to make it pretty or different to attract more tourists so we can gouge another few nickels out of them.

It is time we had a change and built Victoria for the people who live here and pay the taxes.—Bernard J. Dixon, 28 Menzies Street.

After writing to your Embassy I was given your address in the hope that you may be able to help me.

I should like to correspond with teenage girls (17½ and 19½).

At present I am a student awaiting my final exams to allow me entrance to Oxford University. My hobbies are climbing, canoeing, stamps, light pop music and corresponding. — P. McLaren, 32 Norton Road, Leeds 8, LS8 2DE, England.

From The Times of April 25, 1913:

OTTAWA — Amazement is the only word which can express the feelings of the officials of the department of Indian affairs at the reports which come from British Columbia as to the purchase of the Kitsilano Indian reserve by Mr. W. J. Bowser, and reports that the attorney-general of the province is negotiating for the purchase of other Indian reserves. It was understood, as the result of an agreement last year between Sir Richard McBride and the Dominion, that the whole question of the Indian reserves of B.C. would be left in abeyance, and that the province was bound not only not to insist on its previous claims but also pledged not to take any further action which would alter the situation pending a royal commission's report.

Hand Wringing in the White House

Staff Subservient Do-As-Your-Told Types

By LOU CANON
The Washington Post

KEY BISCAYNNE, Fla. — The other night when Richard Nixon took a two-hour cruise on the Potomac on the presidential yacht Sequoia, one White House staffer asked another, who had accompanied the president. The aide was told that the president had gone alone.

"I found myself wondering," the first aide recalled later, "Who it was that the president really had taken with him."

There is nothing surprising about the president taking a solitary cruise in the middle of his latest and most damaging crisis. It has been his pattern in every crisis of the past, and his privacy has often been the prelude to the announcement of an unanticipated and dramatic strategy.

But the aide's suspicion about what in this case was the truth is itself more reflective than anything his superiors, or even the president, are likely to say about the most important change within the White House.

For the first time the president now lacks credibility within his own official family. For the first time his words and actions are being doubted by those who have loyally followed Mr. Nixon, who labored for his re-election and who value him as a decisive and capable chief executive.

"I've thought of just quietly quitting and getting myself a business job," says one such staffer. "But if I left now, it would look like I had something to do with Watergate, which I don't. And my friends who stayed behind would think me an informer or a newspaper source. So I've just tried to do my job and forget about it. Some days I don't even read the morning paper."

Another lower-level staffer says he thought of circulating a petition expressing the disgust of White House staffers at the way the Watergate investigation has been handled. He discarded the idea.

"The only thing that would happen is that all of us who signed the petition would be fired," he said. "It wouldn't accomplish a thing."

This aide believes that most members of the White House staff are "basically subservient, do-as-you're-told types" who are likely to remain loyal to the president no matter what happens. In his own case, this aide says that he thought many times about quitting, but he has decided to stick it out.

Perhaps there are many such White House staffers who feel the same way and regard the others as "basically subservient."

One aide tells of a party the other night, attended mostly but not exclusively by White House people, where everyone "looked at each other suspiciously, drank with great care and never mentioned Watergate." He compared it to a scene from "The Godfather" and to the Mafia tradition of Omerta, the code of silence.

Unlike the members of the murderous Corleone "family" in "The Godfather," however, the White House aides purportedly implicated in the Watergate case have been anything but silent. There are some indications that the high-level talkativeness has become contagious.

"I'm kind of fascinated by it," says a White House secretary, who admits she thought the Watergate case was "just newspaper talk" during the campaign. "It's fascinating to pick up the paper every day and read something about people you know and wonder, 'who's going to be named next?'"

She believes her "fascination" is widely shared among her friends at the White House and says that the subject has become a staple, if guarded, subject of conversation at the White House mess.

Much of the interest among White House staffers centers on what will happen "after Haldeman." It is an unstated presumption among staffers who are willing to talk about it that No. 1 presidential aide H. R. Haldeman will leave, whether or not he turns out to have had knowledge of Watergate.

"What Bob had going for him was his competence," says one staffer who has never particularly liked him. "That's all blown away now, no matter what happens."

Though Haldeman has been frequently linked in Teutonic name association outside the White House with No. 1 domestic adviser John Ehrlichman, the two men are seen as distinctly unalike within the cloistered confines of the White House.

Ehrlichman is considered more approachable, less suspicious, more interested in the content of specific programs. He is by far the more popular figure of the two.

But it is also considered unlikely that Ehrlichman will take over Haldeman's role. In fact, some staffers believe there never will be "another Haldeman" in the Nixon administration, although someone clearly will wind up with the key assignment of controlling access to the president.

It is this "gatekeeper" role that is widely considered the source of Haldeman's power in the Nixon administration — as it was the source of Sherman Adams' power under President Eisenhower. But Haldeman has vastly more power than Adams had, because Haldeman has also exercised a line-officer operational authority of controlling staff and office assignments.

Watergate Complex in Washington Where Bugging Is the Byword

Nielson's Naughty Questions

Tories Take Hard Line

By PETER DESBARATS

Questions raised by Conservative MP Erik Nielsen about the competence and political neutrality of the Trudeau government Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group (PSPAG) are so fundamental, detailed and explosive that even members of his own party are nervous about their implications.

The verbal questions which Nielsen has put to Solicitor-General Warren Allmand this session were only a prelude to the 29 written questions which appeared on the order paper under his name on April 6.

These questions indicate such an intimate knowledge of the state security apparatus that government sources admit, privately, that Nielsen is being supplied with inside information.

But not even members of his own caucus know more than that. While his general line of questioning in the House has been discussed beforehand within David MacDonald's group that plans Opposition strategy for the question periods, the written questions of April 6 were never outlined in detail for Nielsen's colleagues.

No Warning

Members of MacDonald's group particularly deny having received any advance warning of Nielsen's Question 17 concerning the background of Lt.-Col. Walter J. Dabros of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group. Nielsen asked whether Dabros "has undergone psychoanalysis for personality problems or for any other reason while employed with the Canadian Armed Forces" and whether the force's directorate of security ever reported adversely "on aggressive behavior" by Col. Dabros.

Asked for his personal reaction to this question, a front-bench member of the Conservative caucus said that he was "horrified" by it.

While it will probably be weeks before answers to the 29 questions are tabled in the House, the defence department responded promptly and unequivocally to Question 17 last week by promoting the 40-year-old Dabros to full colonel and appointing him director of security at defence headquarters in Ottawa.

Contacted at his law office in Whitehorse, Yukon, this week and asked for a comment on Dabros' promotion, Nielsen said, "I've never hesitated in the past to make an apology if I've been wrong about something."

Among the 29 questions, the Dabros item is in a category by itself. Most of the other questions relate to the structure, personnel and activities of PSPAG and other federal security groups. A number of questions are devoted to alleged contacts between these groups and the Liberal party in Ottawa and Quebec.

For instance, Nielsen asks whether PSPAG has conveyed information to "Premier Bourassa and to the Quebec Liberal Party." He asks for information about security screening of applications for local initiatives grants, and about whatever role the Liberal party MPs might play in approving L.I.P. grants. Other questions relate to alleged security surveillance of labor unions and university campuses.

If the factual basis for Nielsen's questions remains unclear, even to his fellow Conservatives, his motivation is no secret. It does not stem primarily from a concern about civil liberties but from a fundamental disagreement with the Trudeau government's decision to add a "civilian" body to the security apparatus that traditionally has been under RCMP control.

This move was recommended by the royal commission on security in 1969 which proposed that there should be a "security secretariat" in the privy council office, and that the security function of the RCMP should eventually be taken over by a civilian non-police agency operating in liaison with the RCMP.

Without fully implementing these recommendations, the government has moved in this direction by promising that the security service of the RCMP will be "increasingly separate in structure and civilian in nature," and by attaching the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group to the solicitor-general's office.

Secret Police Force?

PSPAG now has a staff of 10 officials and four secretaries and an annual budget of about $200,000.

The solicitor-general has repeatedly denied allegations from both Conservative and NDP members that this is a "secret police force" and insisted that it has no authority to do anything but research, plan and advise the government on security matters.

The central issue that concerns both Solicitor-General Allmand and Nielsen is the independence of the security apparatus from political interference.

Nielsen's belief that this is an area of government activity which has to be watched closely, even suspiciously, is correct. But the same careful scrutiny has to be applied to the intentions and tactics of all members of Parliament when they deal with this area, particularly when they zero in on individuals who have no possibility of immediate reply. reply.

Machine Age Unemployment

By ISRAEL BERKOVITCH
The Manchester Guardian

The first conference on industrial robot technology has just ended at Nottingham University.

What do the machines look like and what can they do?

One which attempts to copy and replace a human operator directly is the spray-painting robot described by K. M. Haugan of Norway. This has an operating arm mounted on a base and an electronic control unit with a magnetic tape memory. The active part has five movements — the horizontal hip, the shoulder, the elbow and two hand wrist movements. Programming calls for no expert knowledge.

After the machine is set up, a skilled spray-gun operator takes the spray gun into his right hand and leads the robot through the desired movements to give the product a perfect coat of paint. Switches are thrown and the robot is then ready for action; it will repeat the program in exactly the way it was taught whenever a new product comes into position.

Others shown in the exhibition accompanying the conference were able to pick up components from stockpiles, assemble them on a jig, even screw them together and put them into another storage place.

The conference heard papers on applying such devices in hot forging, die casting, plastic molding, welding, handling explosives, machine loading and other industrial applications.

The industrial applications, as Professor Donald Michie of Edinburgh University pointed out, of robotics in general require very little machine intelligence and the consequent programming.

Programs have been developed for sorting objects by visual appearance, packing objects into a confined space and stacking rings on a peg. Their goals of designing systems which are not only teachable but self-programmable can readily lead to the kind of apprehension or, at least, critical examination of the results of these developments which was also ably expressed at the same conference.

★ ★ ★

Apart from academic contributions, both British and Swedish trade union representatives were available to indicate, in essence, that just as war is much too serious to be left to the military, so robotics is too major a social development to be left to its own technical enthusiasts.

The latter claim that these machines will be introduced to replace humans mainly in intolerable situations — too hot, noisy, radioactive, or simply too tedious.

But M. J. Cooley, a design engineer, said they could free men from soul-destroying tasks; but are more likely to be used to maximize profits than to improve the quality of life.

And the basic question, coming from a union organizing both designers and operators, was not satisfactorily answered at the conference; it was, "why design machines for pattern recognition while we have 700,000 unemployed who are already skilled at pattern recognition?"

THE MORALIST IN TROUBLE

By JOHN NICHOL
Toronto Sun Syndicate

VANCOUVER — In the United States, the Watergate crisis is escalating rapidly. Employees of the Committee for the re-election of the President have been convicted of wire tapping and burglary, having been caught in the act at the Democratic headquarters during the last presidential election.

Strangely, in spite of democratic efforts, the Watergate case made little impression on the voters during the election. McGovern tried to call the attention of the electrorate to this incredible piece of political immorality — but he got nowhere. Perhaps his own sloppy handling of the Eagleton affair, and all the troubles which surrounded his selection of a vice-presidential candidate had destroyed his credibility. Perhaps the American electorate is so cynical about its politicians that the Watergate Affair came as no surprise. But whatever the reason, the Republicans got away with it — in the short term.

Now it appears that the Watergate case has become a scandal of major proportions, one which casts dark shadows on the Republicans' hopes for 1976. This is confirmed by the revolt of leading Republicans against the President's handling of the whole affair.

Who Said Go?

There is no doubt that the offences took place. There is no doubt that officials of the President's campaign committee were involved. The question now is simple. Who knew? Who authorized the raid? Mitchell — the president's campaign chairman? Haldeman — The president's senior staff man? The president himself?

It may well be that none of the top men knew of the skullduggery, but these questions have prompted senior Republicans, like Senator Barry Goldwater and Senator Aikens of Vermont, to openly criticize their president.

Simple Virtues

Richard Nixon has always campaigned as a moralist. He supports the simple virtues that he believes built America. (His is the world of Billy Graham, Lawrence Welk, and The Sound of Music). Faith, hope, charity, honor, respect for the law, order in society are his stocks in trade. Let's assume for the moment that he is right. If so his behavior in the Watergate case is most strange.

To begin with — he has had nothing to say about the case until now. Is he not outraged that these acts were committed in his name? If he is, why has he not said so before now.

The people are not stupid. The president's secrecy can only lead them to conclude that he has something sinster to hide. If he and his staff were not involved in the Watergate Affair, then why should he fear the truth?

Richard Nixon is an unusually sure-footed politician, or — more correctly — he has been up to now. He will be hard pressed to work his way gracefully out of this tangle. If he wants to return to the roots of America for an answer, he could look up the words of the great American patriot, Thomas Paine, who said:

"It is with a pious fraud as with a bad action:

It begets a calamitious necessity of going on."

Killings Jolt S. Africans

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (Reuter) — White-ruled southern Africa's efforts to contain African nationalist guerrillas have been severely jolted by the killing of nine men engaged in security operations. South Africa, Rhodesia and Portugal, which is fighting guerrillas in Mozambique, now could start closing ranks in the battle against black nationalists.

Six of those who died in the latest guerrilla attacks were black. The Rhodesians reported three white members of their security forces and one black were killed near the Rhodesian border with Mozambique. Three guerrillas were killed in the skirmish, the biggest since the latest troubles began last December.

In Cape Town, South African Defence Minister Pieter Botha said four black policemen and an African tracker died in an ambush on a foot patrol in the Caprivi Strip, sandwiched between Rhodesia, Botswana and Zambia.

The Salisbury and Cape Town announcements of the clashes came within minutes of each other Tuesday night. Observers say the killings will give added impetus to those who have been demanding tough action against the guerrillas and countries which harbor them.

The Caprivi Strip ambush occurred on Good Friday and was the most serious reported in the area part of South African ruled southwest Africa.

Botha said investigations showed the guerrillas had wounded four of the South African patrol and then picked them off one by one with machine-guns. He said the guerrillas came from Zambia.

The Rhodesians did not say when the incident involvng their forces occurred or where the guerrillas came from.

The Rhodesian government has mounted security operations on a large scale. Stiff penalties have been introduced to discourage local tribesmen from becoming involved in guerrilla activities.

But the guerrilla operations have spread. They moved to the Zambezi River border with Zambia at one stage and as the attacks continued, Prime Minister Ian Smith followed his complaints against Zambia for allegedly harboring guerrillas by closing his border with that country Jan. 9.

Since then, guerrillas have hit farms to the south of Salisbury.

But most of the action has been in the northeast. Links are possible from there not only with Zambia but also with Mozambique, where Portugal is fighting Guerrillas.

Murder Charge Hearing

A preliminary hearing into the March 9 stabbing death of a 38-year-old Saanich woman entered its second day in Victoria provincial court today.

Jo-Ann Anderson, 17, of 4060 Cedar Hill Crossroad, faces a non-capital murder charge in the death of her mother, Shirley Lorraine, found stabbed in her living room.

A routine no-publication order, requested by defence counsel Cecil Branson was granted by Judge William Ostler.

The hearing is expected to end today.

France Collecting Noise Tax

ROISSY, France (AP)—The French are building Europe's largest airport in this flatlands of beet fields and peaceful villages near Paris. If you pass through on vacation, you'll have to pay a tax to protect the villagers from jet roar.

A government decree, said by officials to be the first for a major airport anywhere in the world, provides for the tax on every departing passenger to help pay for relocating people who don't want to live near the airport or for soundproofing the homes of those who want to stay.

The government imposed the tax because of pressure from groups in the Roissy area and in Villeneuve le Roi, a town at the end of the main runway at Orly Airport south of Paris.

"We don't want to end up like the poor people at Villeneuve," says Pierre Bories, a 43-year-old lawyer who heads a community organization in the Roissy area 17 miles north of Paris.

AFFECTS 250,000

He estimates 250,000 people in 45 towns and villages around Roissy will suffer "noise nuisance" when the airport takes over from Orly as France's chief gateway.

The Roissy airport is one-third the area of the city of Paris and will be able to handle 60 million passengers a year by 1985.

The noise tax began last February for travellers from Orly and the third major Paris airport, Le Bourget. It will be collected at Roissy as soon as the airport opens next spring.

Unofficial estimates show the tax—22 cents a passenger for interior flights and 66 cents for international travel—will bring in about $3½ million in 1973.

56 OLD FOLK DIED WAITING FOR BEDS

EDMONTON (CP) — Ald. Bill McLean says 56 elderly persons on a waiting list of 106 died before being admitted to two auxiliary hospitals last year. In a letter to the Alberta Hospital Services Commission urging an immediate start on planning for a new hospital, McLean says "these are not acceptable figures to a family incumbered with the repsonsibility of a terminal patient."

The letter says that a study of admission forms indicates "judicious restraint" had been exercised in the utilization of auxiliary hospitals, with applications for admission postponed until absolutely essential.

McLean also charged the medical profession and hospitals "have displayed a callous concern over the plight of elderly terminal patients discharged to the care and custody of friends, relatives agencies or special services."

business

Neonex

Neonex International Ltd. reports first quarter net earnings of $201,000 his year, a 42 per cent increase from last year's $142,000. Consolidated sales and revenue rose 35 per cent to $43,582,000 from $32,257,000 last year.

Neonex International is an industrial corporation in a number of consumer markets.

Maclean

Maclean-Hunter Ltd. had a first-quarter profit of just over $1,000,000 or 13.3 cents a share, president Donald Campbell told the annual meeting of shareholders.

That represents an increase of 9.4 per from $969,000 or 12.1 cents a share in the corresponding period of 1972.

Revenue for the quarter increased more than 44 per cent to $24.9 million.

Imperial Oil

Imperial Oil's first-quarter earnings are estimated at $46 million or 36 cents a share, up from $45 million or 35 cent a share a year earlier, shareholders were told today at the annual meeting.

President J. A. Armstrong said crude oil and natural gas liquids production was up 22 per cent to 278,000 barrels a day but the impact on earnings was tempered by higher royalty and exploration costs.

Armstrong told the meeting that delay in building a natural gas pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley to accommodate a crude line for Alaskan crude would not be in the best interests of Canada.

He said he does not believe that both lines can be built at the same time down the Mackenzie unless such a project is undertaken "jointly or separately by the governments of Canada and the United States."

Wosks

Wosks' Ltd. reports sales of $4,035,702 in the first three months of 1973, up 34.7 per cent from sales of $2,996,805 in the first three months of 1972.

Company president Ben Wosk did not have an estimate of this year's first quarter earnings. Wosk told shareholders at the company's annual meeting he expects sales to double in the next five years. He said sales increased to $15.6 million in 1972 from $6.9 million in 1968.

B.C. Turf

British Columbia Turf Ltd. reports 1972 net earnings of $157,064 or 16.5 cents a share compared with net earnings of $144,582 or 15.1 cents a share in 1971. Income rose to $2.4 million in 1972 from $2.2 million in 1971.

Great-West Life

Great-West Life Assurance Co. of Winnipeg reports record sales of $980,576,000 for the three months ended March 31, a 49 per cent rise from the same period in 1972.

Earnings for the three-month period were $1.23 a share compared with $1.35 for the same period last year.

As well, company directors approved payment of the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share on June 1 to shareholders of record at the close of business May 16, 1973.

Gulf Oil

Gulf Oil Corp., among the world's leading producers of petroleum reports an 18.7-per-cent increase in earnings for the first quarter of this year and listed total revenues of more than $2.1 billion.

Gulf told its stockholders that its consolidated net earnings of $165 million so far this year were equal to 80 cents a share, compared with 67 cents a share on earnings of $139 million for the same period last year.

U.S. Steel

U.S. Steel Corp. reports earnings for the first quarter of 1973 more than doubled from the same period a year ago on total revenues of $1.52 billion.

First-quarter income totalled $49 million, or 91 cents a share, compared with net earnings of $19 million, or 35 cents a share, for the 1972 first quarter, U.S. Steel said.

Sales during the first three months of last year topped $1.12 billion.

Financing Squeeze Cited

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

New provincial legislation will make it difficult for companies to raise financing to develop mines, British Columbia Mining Association president W. J. Tough said today.

He said in an interview it will be very difficult to get a loan from a bank to put a mine into operation when the company can not show that the mine will go ahead.

New provincial legislation gives the government power to amend or veto proposed mining operations in B.C.

"How can you get financing if you can not demonstrate you are going to end up with a mine?"

MUST GET LEASE

He said mining is always a gamble but the provincial government has made it an even more risky business.

He said the amendments to the Mineral Act in Bill 44 put development of any new mine into question.

"A company which may have spent many millions of dollars to bring a property to production stage will not be allowed to mine without first obtaining a production lease on the property," Tough said.

"The unsettling factors of this are that it is within the discretion of the minister to grant or refuse a lease, and there is no indication of the terms that may accompany the granting of the lease."

Other legislation introduced in the spring session has created so much uncertainty that exploration and development inevitably will slow down in B.C., he said.

GIVE DETAILS

The full effect of much of the legislation might not be known until the provincial government publishes regulations giving details of the new laws.

The regulations are expected to be handed down over the summer months.

"Until we see the regulations we will not know for sure where we stand," he said.

"This uncertainty is very harmful to the industry."

Hundreds of millions of dollars had been invested in mines in recent years and now some of the investments are in jeopardy because the rules of the game have been changed, he said.

ASSESS EACH OTHER

"It would seem only reasonable to expect that there now will be a period of time during which the industry and government will cautiously assess each other, seeking areas of mutual interest, trust and understanding.

"During this time it is likely that exploration will be reduced and new mine construction will be at a relative standstill."

What will the mining industry do about it?

"We will co-operate with the government, of course — what else can we do? But we will also point out to them the cumulative effect of this new legislation."

He said these are the moves which are of particular concern to the mining industry:

—Bill 42, the Land Commission Act, gives the government power to rule on use of land, could withhold land from mining use.

—Bill 44, Amendments to the Mineral Act, permit the government to issue or withhold a production lease on proposed mines and allow the government to acquire equity in mining ventures. Tough said the industry can not help but wonder if acquisition of shares by the government might not be tied to the granting of a lease.

—Bill 62, Amendments to the 1962 Income Tax Act, raises corporation taxes in B.C. from 10 per cent to 12 per cent.

—Bill 63, a new tax of one-tenth of one per cent on capital employed in business. This corresponds to a similar Ontario tax but there the mining industry is partly exempt, unlike B.C.

—Bill 64, The Mineral Land Tax Act permits the government to levy taxes on crown-granted mineral lands. Owners of the grants will pay $2 per acre if they are located at or near operating mines, from 25 cents to $1 per acre outside designated producing areas.

—Those mines which operate under titles not defined in Bill 64 will be, by year's end, required to pay a tax equivalent as though they had been liable under the bill, Tough said.

In all, the changes are expected to cost the mining industry from $20 million to $25 million a year plus a similar amount from royalty legislation.

Multi-Million Army Graft

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — A military prosecutor has accused 26 army officers of taking bribes and kickbacks on military purchases.

Military sources say the alleged graft runs into millions of dollars.

It is the second such case in two months, threatening a major scandal for the military regime that pledged to stamp out corruption in government when it seized power nine years ago.

Afton Pushes Pact

VANCOUVER (CP) — The managing director of Vancouver-based Afton Mines Ltd. says he is disappointed that Canex Placer Ltd., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Placer Development Ltd. of Vancouver, has stopped all exploration work on Afton's Kamloops copper orebody.

Robert E. Hallbauer said Afton had sent a letter to Canex pointing out that Afton shareholders had disapproved of the Afton-Canex agreement regarding the development of the orebody.

He said Afton suggested that an agreement be worked out so development of the orebody could proceed "without prejudice to the ultimate rights of either Canex or Afton."

Canex-Placer has taken legal proceedings against Afton trying to compel the company to live up to the terms of the exploration and development contract. Canex announced last week that it was halting work at the Kamloops property pending settlement of the dispute.

Afton is controlled by Teck Corp. Ltd. of Vancouver which tried to have the Afton-Canex Placer development contract set aside by the courts last year but lost.

Skinny Logs Used By Mills

SAND POINT, Idaho (AP) — Two north Idaho sawmills have found a way to use skinny, undersized logs by making them into small boards.

The mills, in Sandpoint and Bonners Ferry, produce lumber — mainly 2 by 2's, 2 by 3's and 2 by 4's — for the construction industry.

A slim log, 2¾ inches in diameter, is fed into the mill and emerges as a straight 2 by 2 for example.

"We utilize material that up to now has been wasted and we turn out a product which the large mills don't like to bother with," says Don Diehl, operator of the Sandpoint mill.

The mills, Diehl adds, have meant jobs for loggers and some entrepreneurs. Small-scale loggers and part-time woodsmen bring in most of the small logs processed at Diehl's mill.

The economy of northern Idaho is certain to benefit as the harvesting of small logs increases, said Donald White, Coeur D'Alene area forester for the University of Idaho.

The Bonners Ferry mill, owned by the Bonners Ferry Post Co., turns the small logs into grape stakes, tree stakes, fence railings and posts.

The two small, locally-owned mills already are shipping orders to customers in Oregon, California and other states, he added.

Board Seizes Eggs

TRAIL (CP) — The British Columbia Egg Marketing Board has seized 3,750 dozen eggs from Super-Valu stores in the West Kootenays, because the eggs were brought in from Manitoba.

Board regulations state that only eggs produced in B.C. may be sold in the province's supermarkets.

Esther Wood, a spokesman for Super-Valu, said the eggs were bought for nine cents a dozen less in Manitoba than they would have cost in B.C.

She said they were bought for Super-Valu stores in Nelson, Trail, Grand Forks, Rossland and Castlegar.

She said company lawyers were considering challenging the B.C. Egg Marketing Board in court.

b.c. briefs

Suit Dismissed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mr. Justice Kirke Smith of the British Columbia Supreme Court Tuesday dismissed a civil damage suit brought by James Corbett against RCMP constable R. F. A. Lambert.

Corbett was shot in the left shoulder and chest during a break-in Christmas eve, 1969, in Quesnel, when he dived head-first out a service station window after police arrived.

Flying Seminar

PENTICTON (CP) — The Airport committee here is bringing together expert civilian, commercial and military pilots to participate in a mountain flying seminar May 5 and 6. Officials of the ministry of transport, radio and weather bureaus will also be on hand at the seminar.

Hearing Set

VANCOUVER (CP) — Donne Hutchison was remanded in custody to May 31 for preliminary hearing when she appeared in provincial court Tuesday charged with capital murder in the knifing death of Vancouver taxi driver Muk Chee Tam.

The cabbie died April 16 after he was stabbed in the stomach during a scuffle outside a downtown Vancouver hotel.

Grant Ridiculous

SURREY (CP) — The council of Surrey has granted themselves $9,000 to pay for all nine members and their spouses to attend the Canada Federation of Mayors and Municipalities conference in Charlottetown in June.

The council vote, which was made March 26 but not disclosed until Tuesday, is based on $602 return air fare for each alderman and his wife, plus $50 per day for the four-day conference.

Mayor Vander Zalm has called the grant "ridiculous" and charges such conferences are "a waste of time."

Loan Approved

VANCOUVER (CP) — Urban Affairs Minister Ron Basford has announced approval of a $3.2 million loan to Westsea Construction to build a low rental housing development for Vancouver senior citizens. The 24-storey high-rise apartment will contain 183 bachelor and 94 one-bedroom units.

Terms Outlined

RICHMOND (CP) — Ottawa has defined the terms of reference of its special representative working on the expropriation of Sea Island property here to make way for the expansion of Vancouver International Airport. Isidore Wolfe, the man named as ombudsman in any disputes, said Tuesday his duties are to assist Sea Island residents in the orderly surrender of their property. He said the worst part of his job will come when Ottawa makes its offers to the individual residents.

400 Million Blackbirds —All Heading This Way?

Being some selected items from a man's personal diary:

★ ★ ★

Item: One of those fine, serene mornings when everything seemed right and proper in my tiny world . . . or did, at any rate, until I arrived at the office and found the note from Philip Prichard, the Seattle writer with whom I've been corresponding these many years.

Seems Phil has been looking into a little-known branch of the Smithsonian Institute called The Centre For Short-Lived Phenomena, in which Canada has no less than 99 of the 275 participating scientists from 22 nations and, while Phil is enthusiastic about its work, to me it is just a gloomy reminder of the disaster and doom that waits around every corner. Fair ruined my day, it did.

In one short period, just for example, the centre investigated 71 major volcanic eruptions, 86 major earthquakes, 57 major oil-spills, 40 major fireballs, 15 wayward meteorites, 137 ecological crises, as well as landslides, storm surges, tsunamis (ocean waves from underwater disturbances), tidal waves, major floods and forest fires.

Typical of the kind of thing that can happen to you when you least expect it is the blackbird and starling disaster. No less than three million blackbirds and starlings, it seems, descended upon 40 acres of wooded land on the edge of the small town of Scotland Neck, North Carolina. The people tried everything — sprayed the birds with detergent, played recorded blackbird distress calls, even set off explosives — but nothing worked. A year later there were more than six million birds at Scotland Neck and one of the Centre's scientists has now estimated that in North America there are four hundred million blackbirds and starlings.

I will not be at all surprised if these birds are now on the wing, heading my way for one of those "short-lived phenomena" that awaits us all.

★ ★ ★

Item: An invitation through the mail today to join the newest thing in book clubs, called "The Behavioral Science Book Service" and I am wondering how in the world my name got on that list.

The introductory offer of any three books for a mere $3.95 invites me to choose from, among others, these titles:

"The Shame and Guilt in Neurosis" — an objective basis for distinguishing the central emotions of shame and guilt.

"Pathways to Madness" — innovative study of the relationship of family structure to emotional breakdown.

"Depression—Comparative Studies of Normal, Neurotic and Psychotic Conditions" — a crucial contribution to the psychological understanding and treatment of depression.

"The Neuroses" — clinical and phenomenological aspects.

"Sanity, Madness and The Family" — focuses on each member of the family of schizophrenic patients.

"Violence and the Struggle for Existence" — investigation of all aspects of violence.

"Bereavement" — the ways in which men and women react to the experience.

Do they know something I don't know? If they do, I don't want to know.

★ ★ ★

Item: Some astonishing figures this morning from Gabriola Island where, it seems, a door-to-door survey has established that a majority of residents actually favor a terminal for the Vancouver ferry and the four-lane highway and bridges that it will entail.

It somewhat confirms my suspicion that there's been a profound change in the kind of person who seeks the island existence. Time was when they were all escapists searching for a place surrounded by water from which to look at the world.

In his book, "One Man's Island," David Conover, put it rather well:

"The beauty of island life is that it bleaches out nearly all the impurities of what has gone before," Dave wrote. "It provides distance and quietude for value judgments. Thus, unknowingly, I have become an anachronism. I am a free man. Like a young gull who is no longer nestbound, but who has wings with which to soar and cares little what land he roams over or into which river, lake, or sea he swoops for fish. The island could as well be off the coast of Spain or Madagascar. For I am bounded by no system of things, no border except that of truth . . ."

That was the motivation of most island-seekers in the past. But more and more, travelling through the gulf islands, I find a new breed who seek simply a cleaner environment than the city, a place to raise a family or follow a career. They are more interested in the conveniences, the hospitals, the schools, the good roads, even the bridges that will provide quicker links with civilization. Nearly all of the eccentrics have died off. Now there is a kind of middle-class suburban population with chambers of commerce and service clubs and the rest.

The concern that the Gulf Islands may lose their character becomes even greater with the realization that the character of their people has changed already.

SNOOZING, SLIDING AND SWINGING are among easy-going doings at Beacon Hill Park these days as April showers are scarce and May flowers are early. Kindergarten set, foot-loose for the Easter holidays, experiences its first traffic jam on the slides. For toddlers, watching with their parents from the sidelines, it's a time to dream of joining the mob — or to just rest a little getting ready. (Bill Halkett photos.)

22 Motorists Charged At Long Beach

Twenty-two charges were laid against drivers running their cars on the restricted beach area in Pacific Rim National Park at Long Beach over the Easter weekend, Reg Joscelyn, acting park superintendent, said today.

Cars are restricted to a three-mile stretch of beach, he said.

Meanwhile, Mayor Al Russell of Ucluelet said the federal parks department should lose no time establishing a proper camping ground.

"An Alberta resident is constructing a large camping ground outside the village," he said. "But this is not going to be sufficient to cope with the large crowds that come here."

He said cars were bumper to bumper in the village over the weekend.

He also said he was disappointed that the federal parks department did not inform the regional district it was not including a section of Kennedy Lake in the park.

The Kennedy Lake property is about three miles from the Tofino-Ucluelet highway and was under federal jurisdiction. It was turned over to the provincial government on April 1 allowing it to develop the area as a day park.

"More people are finding out about the Kennedy Lake area and are using it," the mayor said.

Oak Bay Stands Pat On Salaries

Oak Bay aldermen — facing a $3,892,468 preliminary budget calling for a six-mill tax increase — decided Tuesday night to forego a salary increase for themselves.

Unlike many other municipalities, they will hold the line at $6,300 for Mayor Frances Elford and $2,400 for aldermen.

The decision was made at council's first budget-paring session which resulted in only minor pruning.

Mayor Elford said she would be in favor of a seven per cent increase for aldermen, but not for herself.

Speaking against an increase, Ald. Brian Smith said, "I don't think we should follow the example of other councils. I think we're adequately paid."

He added that aldermanic stipends should not become of a size that they would become attractive as a means of rounding out incomes.

Ald. Shirley Dowell agreed, "This is not the year for increases," she said, "when we're building a recreation centre. We shouldn't follow the lead of other councils."

However, council decided to raise the amount spent on attending conventions.

Originally set at $4,840, this was raised to $6,221.

Foreign Control Worry 'Foolish'

It is foolish to worry about buying out foreign-owned companies when Canadian savings could be put to much better use, says IBM Canada Ltd. president L. K. Lodge of Don Mills, Ont.

Canadian resources should be used to start up new companies rather than to buy existing firms, he told a luncheon meeting today of Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce at The Empress.

He said for Canadians to buy up even 25 per cent of IBM Canada Ltd. it would cost $280 million.

"That is as much as the total capital invested last year in all new equity issues in Canada. Just visualize the impact of $280 million in the creation of new Canadian ventures in data processing.

One of the things that seems to bother many Canadians is the feeling that because companies like ours are foreign-owned, they are also foreign-controlled to the degree that national sovereignty is endangered.

"But, in fact, nothing could be further from the truth," Lodge said.

"To suggest that companies like my own run roughshod over national objectives is to ignore the whole spectrum of Canadian legislation, tax and tariff policies, the controls exerted by the marketplace and the influence of Canadian management itself."

He said the company employs 9,000 in Canada and all officers and all but one of the 14 directors of IBM Canada Ltd. are Canadian.

"But the one thing that should set the argument to rest is common sense. We are here for the long pull. We have been in business here for more than 60 years and we plan to be here for a lot more."

SECOND SECTION

Nuns Remain, So Do Guards

Three nuns complete their sixth week of sitting in at St. Mary's Priory today as guards hired by an opposing faction continue to bar them from most of the building.

Sisters Mary Agnes Eaton, Mary Josephine Donovan and Mary Lucy Ford have been locked from all but a basement kitchen and an upstairs wing of bedrooms and washrooms since they refused to vacate the priory March 15.

Members of the Society of the Love of Jesus, they are engaged in a long-standing dispute with another group of members led by Sister Leonette Hoesing. The three sisters contend Sister Leonette was ineligible to be elected mother prioress and have refused to recognize her authority.

Supporting the three are Mother Cecilia Mary, who operates the Good Shepherd animal shelter at Mill Bay, and one of her assistants, Sister Mary Julia.

At issue is control of the society, which Mother Cecilia founded and headed for 30 years. It has about $500,000 in liquid assets and property worth an estimated $1 million.

The three Sisters wrote a lengthy letter to Bishop Remi de Roo and Sister Leonette on April 6, setting out their views on a number of points in dispute, and are still awaiting a reply.

★ ★ ★

Meanwhile, they noted Tuesday that the other side has spent an estimated $3,800 of the society's funds to date paying for the Western Home Guard Patrol which continues on duty through most of the priory day and night.

It has cost Mother Cecilia about $2,000 for the guards she hired to counter the Western patrol.

In their letter to the bishop and Sister Leonette, the sisters said of the guards: ". . . we have been told that they have been placed there for reasons of 'security.' Security from what? From the depredations of three sisters that love the priory and every square inch of it . . .?"

Hugh McMillan, lawyer for the three sisters, said Tuesday that trying to deal with the other faction is like talking to a wall.

And spending on security guards "is not doing any deserving elderly people any good at all."

The society operates a nearby home for senior citizens and a hospital for chronically ill, mostly elderly people.

ANCHORS AWAY

Saanich will enforce its zoning bylaw to prevent the use of anchored or moored boats for non-transient living accommodation.

Municipal planning committee Tuesday was told an anchored catamaran at Cordova Bay last year had been used for a home.

Planner Tom Loney reported the bylaw covers the matter because the municipal boundary extends 1,000 feet offshore. The zoning is for civic institutional use and living aboard a vessel is a prohibited use.

H-Addict Asks for Pen Term

'I Know I Can Overcome' Drug Habit, Court Told

A 21-year-old Victoria man, who returned to his heroin habit less than a month after he was released from jail, today was sentenced to two years in prison on charges involving a $850 theft and five counts of break and enter.

Anthony Gough, 3244 Quadra, told Judge William Ostler he was released March 21 after serving a 13-month term, "and ran into the wrong people and got involved in heroin again.

"I know I can overcome drugs, I'm older now. I just made that one big mistake," he said.

Gough asked that Ostler consider a penitentiary term so he could work towards rehabilitating himself.

"If I come up in front of you again, you can be as harsh as you wish," he said.

Before sentencing Ostler said "something has to be done to get him sufficiently out of this environment so when he comes out he'll be off drugs.

"If you demonstrate to them (jail officials) what you're saying to me they'll refer you to the penitentiary and you can work towards your day passes," said Ostler.

Prosecutor John Macintyre said Gough had a strong reason to get money for drugs.

Gough admitted taking $850 cash from the manager's office in the Shop Easy store, 2187 Oak Bay, Thursday. Police recovered $364.

He also admitted five break-ins in which a total of $195 was taken early Thursday from four shops in Bastion Square.

Kenneth Wayne Ramsay, 22, of 1536 Wilmot, pleaded guilty Tuesday to a similar break-in charge involving the same incident and was remanded to May 10 for sentence and pre-sentence report.

A charge against him involving the Shop Easy theft was withdrawn at Macintyre's request.

Ask The Times

Q. I would like to know if there is any reliable place in Victoria where one may obtain a "Do-it-yourself" divorce kit, and how much an uncomplicated divorce would cost by this method. V.S.

A. Order the kit, called, B.C. Divorce Guide, from Self-Counsel Press Ltd., 1480 Frances St., Vancouver 6, B.C. Cost for a simple divorce would be about $50.

For extra help, call the Women's Centre at 385-3843. They are trying to organize a group of women working on do-it-yourself divorces.

Nod for Alley Plan

A rehabilitation proposal which would paint up historic Fan Tan Alley and fill it with boutiques will get a favorable recommendation from Victoria's advisory planning commission at city council's Thursday meeting.

The commission reports it "agrees in principle" with the proposal of Milton Tisdale.

The Alley proposal would be the centre of a block-wide redevelopment bounded by Pandora, Store, Fisgard and Government.

The commission recommends turning down an application to build a four-storey motel on the James Bay waterfront at Dallas and St. Lawrence, on the grounds that a new community plan schedules Ogden Point for family residential use.

Publication of forthcoming council business has been newly authorized by the city.

Divided House Still Serving Renters

By WAYNE HARDING
Times Staff

Greater Victoria Rental Aid Service is still in business despite a wrangle that has split the membership into two camps and led to plans to dissolve the organization as a registered society.

"I'm still finding housing for people and I'll still be doing it after April 30 (the date of the planned dissolution)," Jim Nelson, founder of the agency and acting president, said this morning.

The agency had operated for 12 months — placing low-income people in apartments and houses — before it was incorporated under the Societies Act last month.

At the first meeting of the society April 12, the members — most of whom are women working for the agency on welfare incentive grants — split. The meeting failed even to nominate a first board of directors for the organization.

Nelson charged today that collusion among some members of the staff had resulted in the dispute.

"All sorts of things were going on behind my back," he said.

"I have warned this would happen if we formed a society," he said.

Nelson and his supporters hope the society will be formally dissolved at a special meeting April 30.

Meanwhile, four members who were formerly employees of the agency are pressing for continuation of the society.

"We want a democratically-elected board and president," said one of the four, Mrs. E. P. Mitchell, who has been secretary of the agency.

But, she said, if the supporters of society-status fail to win the vote on April 30, "we're prepared to go down to the courthouse the next morning and start all over again with a new society."

She said the staff has considerable knowledge of the work required and is well qualified to operate a rental agency for poor people.

The women have been assured of incentive grant assistance in the meantime, Mrs. Mitchell said.

The society has 41 members and recruitment of new members has been stopped pending the outcome of the April 30 meeting.

Richard Acclaimed As Hero for Habs

MONTREAL (CP) — For a few seconds Tuesday night, Henri Richard, the little captain of Montreal Canadiens and Dave Schultz, the rugged winger of Philadelphia Flyers stood face-to-face near centre ice at the Forum.

They exchanged a few words and then Richard tapped Schultz with his stick as each took his own route following the Canadiens 5-3 win over the Flyers which gave Montreal the best-of-seven Stanley Cup semi-final 4-1.

"He just told me he thought I played a helluva series," Richard said in the Canadiens' dressing room when quizzed by reporters on the brief exchange.

Schultz was not the only one who held that opinion on Richard, who scored the game-winning goal for Montreal with less than eight minutes to play in the third period.

"He was the best player in the series," commented Flyers' coach Fred Shero.

"He led the club," added Montreal coach Scotty Bowman. "There's no question that he was our leader. It's unbelieveable how he can play so well."

But this past National Hockey League season was not entirely happy for Richard. During some parts of the first half, he spent a great deal of time riding the Montreal bench.

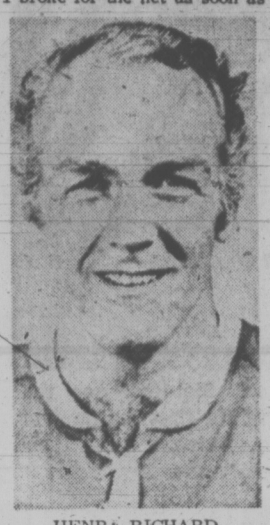
In Vancouver in late November, he was involved in a faceslapping incident with teammate Serge Savard after the two became involved in a heated argument over whether to allow reporters into the Montreal dressing room.

There was talk after that incident that Richard might quit the team, but fortunately for Bowman and the Canadiens he stayed on and has played a big role in Montreal's advancement in the current post-season activities.

"I wanted to finish the season," Richard said. "There's no way I wanted to quit.

Richard did nat say whether he plans to play another year. Rather, he preferred to talk about the play Savard made on the game-winner.

"Serge went around the defence and gave the puck to Frank. Frank couldn't control it so he gave it back to Serge. I broke for the net as soon as



HENRY RICHARD

Serge got the puck back. The defenceman was standing still there."

Despite the fact he got the game-winner, Richard felt he played his "worst game of the playoffs."

"I thought my timing was off in the first two periods. I played better in the last period after I got hit," said the Montreal captain, referring to an eight-stitch cut he took on the right side of the head after being hit by a shot from teammate Larry Robinson.

The teams were tied 1-1 at the end of the opening period and 2-2 going into the final 20 minutes of regulation time.

Bill Flett put the Flyers ahead 3-2 at 5:30 of the third period when Montreal goalie Ken Dryden accidentally cleared the puck against the side of his net instead of behind it and Flett scooped it up and dumped it into the empty net.

Fourteen seconds later, Mahovlich blazed a shot from just outside the Flyers' blueline which got past Favell to tie the score, setting the stage for Richard's winner at 12:07 and Cournoyer's insurance goal 95 seconds later.

Canadiens fired a total of 34 shots at Favell while Dryden faced only 20 Philadelphia drives in the game watched by 17,141 fans. The crowd gave Montreal a prolonged standing ovation at the start of the game, similar to that received by the Flyers when they returned home last week.

Montreal will open its best-of seven final against Chicago Black Hawks here Sunday afternoon at 3:00 p.m. EST. The game will be televised nationally in the U.S. and Canada.

Hockey: Clinics for Coaches Recommended

Ivan Temple, secretary-manager of the British Columbia Hockey Association, was wondering out loud what minor hockey was coming to.

"Would you believe," he said, "that in the peewee pup division a game had to be called in the second period because one player was pounding another player with his stick;

"That fights broke out on the ice and in the stands;

"That the list of penalties included tripping, cross-checking charging, swearing, fighting, stick-swinging;

"That these were 10-year old kids;

"That the coaches were trying to put the blame on the referees;

"That one official said he had never seen anything like it before in his life.

"That, according to the referee's report, 'No. 7 became uncontrollable';

"That there have been more than 100 match penalties in hockey this year;

"That the behaviour pattern is getting worse;

"That 'kicking' is a more frequent penalty than before;

"That a bantam game wound up in a pier-six brawl;

"That a youngster in a bantam game in Vancouver had to be rushed to hospital because of a vicious attack."

Officials Yes; Coaches No

Ivan could have gone on for hours, reciting chapter and verse of game reports, suspensions, protests, and unbelievable ugly incidents that occurred weekly through the hockey season.

"Boring, isn't it?" he mocked.

Who is to blame for the higher incidence of penalties? Is it the referees? Ivan thinks not.

"Refereeing has made terrific strides in the past few years," he explained. "We have spent in excess of $100,000 in the past four years to run refereeing and coaching clinics. We cover every minor hockey association in the province in one way or another each year. A referee must attend at least one clinic a year."

Then came the crunch: "But coaches don't."

It's not that coaches are not invited or are unaware of the clinics. It's just that many don't bother.

It is Temple's feeling that if coaches would take the time to attend some of these lectures they would better understand the role of the official and perhaps be better able to control their players. Thus many incidents could be avoided.

That apparently is the crux of the problem: either that or if the officials are partly at fault, Ivan is prepared to examine that possibility.

Little Respect for Authority

He asks: "We are teaching them the game: they know all the rules: but are we teaching them how to officiate?

Generally speaking, Ivan thinks so, although there can always be improvement.

Still, he would put the onus on the coach as one main reason why so many games get out of control. Players are not being taught to respect authority, and if coaches don't teach youngsters respect for officials, by words, or example, how can a player be expected to learn it?

And if coaches don't attend clinics for their guidance it's because "they think they don't need to know any more. They know enough."

This may be where much of the fault lies: and with nothing but an increase of players in sight for the future, what's ahead?

"This year, we had 6,000 more players than last season," he said. "Now with 10 more rinks, we'll have another 6,000 next year."

The sheer force of numbers is not what's worrying Ivan most, however, it's the trend to that other stuff — defiance of authority, and kicking, which Ivan calls the lowest form of life.

These aren't experienced hockey players, Ivan hastened to explain.

"These are just children — nine and 10 year old kids!"

Jets' Goalie 'Confident'

HOUSTON (AP) — Winnipeg's alternate goalie Joe Daley wears Houston Aeros like a comfortable pair of shoes.

"I guess I feel confident against them because they haven't beaten me," Daley said Tuesday night after spending a busy evening in goal to lead the Jets to a 4-2 victory over the Aeros in the World Hockey Association's semi-final playoffs.

"It's gotten to the point that when I go in, I'm relaxed and confident against them."

Daley appeared anything but relaxed in the first period Tuesday when he turned back 19 shots on goal by the aggressive Aeros, who now are down 3-0 in the best-of-seven series and face elimination in Thursday's game here.

"I got real lucky tonight," Daley said. "I stopped a couple that I didn't even see."

The speedy Jets, with one of the best front lines in the WHA, appeared to be racing away from the Aeros, taking a 3-0 lead after two periods on goals by Joe Zanussi, Norm Beaudin and Bobby Hull.

But suddenly in the third period, the Aeros scored two goals in the first five minutes of play. Winger Ted Taylor got the first one at 1:44 and Jack Stanfield took a pass from Keke Mortson at 4:38 to pull Houston to within one goal.

Chris Bordeleau added the clincher for the Jets at 17:49.

Rangers Quick To Praise Hawks

CHICAGO (CP) — "Great, just beautiful," said Ralph Backstrom after learning Chicago Black Hawks will open the Stanley Cup finals Sunday against Montreal Canadiens, the team that traded him away two years ago.

"It's going to be a big challenge for me going back to Montreal playing for another team in the Stanley Cup final," said the centre after Chicago knocked over New York Rangers 4-1 Tuesday night to capture the National Hockey League semi-finals four games to one.

The Hawks were led by Stan Mikita's two goals while Dennis Hull, who continued his hot scoring pace, and Cliff Koroll added the other Chicago scores.

Rod Gilbert tallied for the Rangers in the final minute of the second period to cut into Chicago's 2-0 lead.

Hull, who also picked up three assists, now has scored in his last six games and tops the post-season point race with 17 points in 10 games.

The Hawks were listed as underdogs to start the semi-final with New York after the Rangers easily disposed of the defending Cup champion Boston Bruins in the opening round.

They didn't improve their image when goaltender Tony Esposito blew a couple of goals as New York opened the round with an easy 4-1 victory here.

But Esposito was invincible in the follow-up games and the Rangers fell victim to persistent Chicago forechecking paced by centres Backstrom, Pit Martin and Mikita.

"We fell into the habit of falling behind," said Ranger coach Emile Francis. "We ran into a dry spell and there was nothing you could do about it."

Francis gave full credit to Hull's effort in the series.

"I haven't seen him skate better any time since he came into the league. He was really moving."

Francis said if Chicago employs a similar type of game in the finals, "they can beat anybody."

"If they play like that in the next series," said Ranger defenceman Jim Neilson, "Montreal's in real trouble."

In addition to Hull, Francis said "their defence and their checking were superb."

Chicago coach Billy Reay said he never was surprised at Chicago's success with the Rangers, but he expected a tougher series with Montreal.

"The Canadians have more depth, probably the best in professional hockey." Reay said. "I think we're going to have to skate much better than we did against New York.

"After all, we're going against a team that lost only 10 games all season." Three of those setbacks were administered by Chicago.

Temper? Ted's Got It

DETROIT (AP) — Ted Garvin, new coach of Detroit Red Wings, is being likened to Manager Billy Martin of baseball's Detroit Tigers.

But, he says with a smile, "I could probably hit a ball better that Billy Martin can shoot a puck."

Garvin, a short, stout native of Sarnia, Ont., had a chance many years ago to become a professional baseball player. Instead, he turned pro in hockey.

"I guess I made the right decision," he said Tuesday after attaining what he said was a lifelong ambition, being named coach of the Red Wings of the National Hockey League.

Garvin, 47, was a shortstop who once tried out with Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics during a spring training camp.

He still keeps close tabs on baseball and says of Martin:

"He's my kind of manager — fiery as hell and wants to win."

For skeptics who don't believe any pro coach or manager can be as fiery as Martin, there are numerous examples of Garvin's temper displays while in the International Hockey League.

For the last five years the rotund Garvin has been coach of the IHL franchise in Port Huron—a Red Wings farm the last three years. He was suspended several times in his first four years, and this year he was suspended twice, totalling five games.

"My temper? I've got it!" Garvin said after his announcement as Red Wings coach.

"I know there are some things I can't do in the National Hockey League. When they (refs) make a bad call at me I'm going to be mad, and they'll know I'm mad.

"There's no doubt there'll be times I get my wrist slapped. I'll be looking forward to it."

Garvin played hockey as a youth in Sarnia and Point Edfard, Ont. He turned pro in 1939 with the Detroit organization. He spent two seasons with Indianapolis and two with St. Louis and Philadelphia of the American Hockey League.

AMAZING ANDY EARNS ANOTHER HUME CUP

SEATTLE (AP)—Veteran Andy Hebenton of the Portland Buckaroos has been awarded the Western Hockey League's Fred J. Hume Cup for the fifth time.

The cup, awarded annually to the player who best combines gentlemanly behavior with playing ability, has been won by only four other players since it was inaugurated in 1961.

Ron Huston of Salt Lake was second in the voting and Portland's Guyle Fielder, a three-time winner, was third.

Hebenton, in his 23rd season as a professional hockey player, participated in all 72 games, scoring 30 goals and 36 assists while receiving only 26 minutes in penalties.

Hebenton received 301 of a possible 450 votes. Huston, the league's rookie-of-the-year, had 110 and Fielder received 70.

The cup is named for the late Fred J. Hume, who once operated the Vancouver Canucks when they were in the WHL.

SABRES ESCAPE TO HIGH GROUND

BUFFALO (AP) — Four members of the Buffalo Sabres hockey team had to seek out high ground during a Sabres' Day celebration that closed off Buffalo's Main Street for more than four hours Tuesday.

Police said more than 5000 enthusiastic fans turned out to applaud their National Hockey League team for making the Stanley Cup playoffs in only their third year of existence.

The crowd was so large that sponsors of the event refused to let Sabres players mingle with the crowd for fear of injury. A scheduled street hockey game between Buffalo radio and television personalities was cancelled.

The four Sabres-defencemen Tracy Pratt and Mike Robitaile, winger Jim Lorentz and goalkeeper Dave Dryden—were taken to the second floor of a bank building to wave at their pushing, shoving and chanting fans.

The celebration was planned by a group of businessmen who got the city to barricade a four-block area of Main Street for the festivities.

Besides the street hockey game, the program called for the appearances of four Sabres to sign autographs.

But the brief second-storey appearance, the Sabres were taken away from their adoring fans through a rear exit and the fans gradually dispersed.

The Sabres, who beat out Detroit Red Wings for fourth place in the East Division by two points, were eliminated in the first round of the Stanley Cup playoffs by Montreal Canadiens.

Draft Goes After Court Rejects Plea

NEW YORK (AP) — Doug Collins of Illinois State was the first player picked Tuesday in the National Basketball Association's 1973 college draft which had been beset by a "family fight" that had forced two postponements and had threatened a third.

Philadelphia, announcing it was participating in the draft under protest, picked Collins after a '76ers' bid for a temporary restraining order to stay the draft was rejected by a judge of the Second United States Court of Appeals in New York earlier in the day.

The '76ers announced they planned further legal action to have reinstated NBA commissioner Walter Kennedy's original ruling that would have given Philadelphia the first-round pick of Seattle as a result of the battle over John Brisker, a former American Basketball Association player who signed with Seattle.

Seattle, in its first-round pick, the fourth of the draft, took Mike Green, a small-college all-American from Louisiana Tech.

In between the choosing of Collins and Green, Cleveland took Jim Brewer, a defensive stalwart from Minnesota, on a pick obtained from Portland, and Buffalo took providence backcourt whiz Ernie DiGregorio, an all-American.

To get the choice of Brewer, Cleveland traded to Portland centre Rich Robertson and forward John Johnson plus a later first-round draft choice. The Cavaliers also got four other draft picks from Portland.

Portland then used the first-round draft pick it got in the trade to take Barry Parkhill of Virginia.

Two all-Americans were selected next — Kermit Washington of American University by Los Angeles on a pick obtained from Cleveland and El Ratleff of Long Beach State by Houston.

Brisker first became involved with the NBA when Philadelphia drafted him out of Toledo. However, he signed with Pittsburgh of the ABA. When the Pittsburgh club folded he was picked in a dispersal draft by Dallas of the ABA but signed with Seattle. However, under NBA rules, he was still the property of Philadelphia.

Kennedy ruled last November that Brisker could stay with Seattle but that Seattle must pay a $10,000 fine and award Philadelphia its first-round draft choice. Then Seattle went to court and a federal judge ruled Kennedy had overstepped the bounds of his powers by not consulting with the league board of governors.

Kennedy called the board into special session last Wednesday and ruled that Seattle must pay a $10,000 fine and give Philadelphia its second-round choice for two years. The board also awarded Philadelphia a bonus pick.

For a trade that would have sent Philadelphia's first-round pick to Chicago for veteran guard Bob Weiss and centre Cliff Ray, Collins said, "I was kind of hoping it would work out. Chicago would have been a great location for me since I've grown up in Illinois."

The trade fell through when the 6-9 Ray did not pass a '76ers physical. He had suffered a knee injury this season.

Algae Concentrations Increasing in Cowichan

Some rambling notes along the trail:

We've been receiving reports from various fishermen and streamside residents of unusually-high concentrations of algae in the Cowichan River . . . Water levels are very low for this time of the year and algae is collecting in various back eddies . . . One long-time angler in the upper part of the river said conditions were "the worst I've ever seen" . . . Add to this the fact that algae seems to be increasing in the Goldstream through runoff from Langford Lake (possibly the nearness of those trailer parks is also playing a part) . . . Algae blooms are a natural occurrence . . . But they are also an early-warning sign of pollution.

Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association president Gary Vaughan won the Chinook Club's first Sunburn Derby recently with a 13-pound, eight-ounce salmon . . . Frank Jervey placed second with a 12:01-pounder and Tommy Chow was third with a catch that tipped the scales at 9:10.

Summaries of the new fishing regulations for non-tidal waters in British Columbia are now off the press . . . Copies will be available at government offices and sporting goods outlets as fast as they can be mailed out . . . Best grab one because there are a few changes for Vancouver Island . . . Foremost changes are a reduced limit on our ever-rarer summer steelhead, fly-fishing only in five areas and a juvenile-only fishery in three spots.

Lloyd Barrett, who works on our news desk, came up with a novel idea recently for recycling cans . . . But it isn't an inspiration guaranteed to win friends among tackle manufacturers . . . Lloyd, tired of losing costly gear while salmon fishing, decided to eliminate part of the expense by cutting his own flashers out of cans . . . First, he cuts off the ends, rolls them out flat, cuts to shape and then bends the ends to get the desired action . . . Smaller flashers, which we plan to rig up for trout fishing with a specially-tied streamer fly, can be cut from the lids.

And while we're on the subject of rigging up lures . . . Here's a halibut jig the commercial fishermen use with great success . . . Attach two large (about three inches long) triple hooks on both ends of a two-pound "banana" weight and rig each hook with a red hootchie-kootchie . . . The line to your rod is then tied on to either end of the weight . . . Fish it with a regular up-and-down motion . . . It is also reported to be a good jig for cod . . . But throw back any halibut you catch, the season hasn't opened yet.

Bob Cheyne of Vancouver, a competitor at various Vancouver Island Shooting League matches on the Island, partnered Stan Frost of Port Hope, Ont., and Arne Sorensen of Calgary to a third-place finish in the 300-metre free rifle event at the recent Benito Juarez international rifle shoot in Mexico City . . . Teams from the United States and Mexico finished second and third, respectively.

Lack of snow during the past winter has supplied some interesting data to a fish and wildlife deer winter range study in the Nimpkish Valley area . . . Which means absolutely no treatment.

Rangers Utilized Hits

By The Associated Press

It's not how many hits you get, a baseball observer once said. It's what you do with them.

Texas Rangers did lots more with their meager four hits than Detroit did with its seven Tuesday night and the Tigers came out on the short end of a 2-1 American League decision.

Steve Foucault, a 23-year-old rookie, handled a pressurepacked ninth inning like a veteran to save the victory for the Rangers. He got power-hitting Willie Horton to rap into a rally-killing double play and then stranded the tying run on third base by retiring Aurelio Rodriguez on a grounder.

Elsewhere in the American League Tuesday, Chicago White Sox defeated New York Yankees 8-4, Minnesota Twins beat Boston Red Sox 6-4, Milwaukee Brewers defeated Kansas City Royals 9-1, Oakland Athletic shut out Cleveland Indians 4-0 and California Angels topped Baltimore Orioles 6-3 in 10 innings with ex-Oriole Frank Robinson smashing a key three-run homer against his old team.

Meanwhile, St. Louis Cardinals snapped a seven-game losing streak in the National League as Rick Wise hurled a six-hitter for a 2-0 shutout over Los Angeles Dodgers.

It was the Cards' second victory of the season against 12 defeats, and Wise has won both games.

In other National League games, San Diego, Padres beat Pittsburgh Pirates 7-5, Montreal Expos turned back Cincinnati Reds 7-2, San Francisco Giants beat Chicago Cubs 4-2 in 10 innings, Atlanta Braves routed Philadelphia Phillies 11-2 and Houston Astros defeated New York Mets 4-2.

The Rangers, accustomed to only a few hits per game, made them count against the Tigers. Dave Nelson singled, stole second, was sacrificed to third and scored on Rico Carty's high bouncer in the first inning against Mickey Lolich.

In the seventh, Carty reached first on a fielder's choice, moved up on a wild pitch and scored on Rich Billings' hit.

Mickey Stanley homered in the eighth for the Tigers and it looked like Detroit would tie it in the ninth when Bill Freehan and Al Kaline opened with singles. But Foucault bailed the Rangers out, feeding Horton the double play pitch and jamming Rodriguez for the final out.

Robinson supplied a touch of drama to his first meeting with his old Baltimore teammates. He slugged a three-run homer that helped California wipe out an early five-run Baltimore lead.

The Angels tied the score in the bottom of the ninth on Bob Oliver's pinch single and then won it in the 10th when Jim Spencer delivered his third hit of the game, a bases-loaded single.

Errors were Kansas City's downfall. A pair of miscues by Paul Schaal helped the Brewers to three runs in the third, an inning in which George Scott's leadoff double was the only Milwaukee hit. Another error by pitcher Paul Splittorff keyed a two-run sixth.

Scott, Pedro Garcia and John Vukovich had two hits each for the Brewers.

Esquimalt Alive In Puck Tourney

KAMLOOPS — Seven teams, including two from Vancouver Island and two from Finland, were knocked out of the Kamloops international bantam hockey tournament Tuesday.

However, Esquimalt kept its hopes alive with a 10-3 romp over Kimberley. Murray Allen, Rick Greenhall and Jim Entzminger got two goals each while Terry Jasper, Pat Duncan, Gerry Lindal and Ron Hope were the other scorers.

Island teams eliminated were Comox, beaten 8-5 by Medicine Hat, and Fuller Lake Flyers, edged 3-2 by Kelowna.

Paul McCaffrey and Bruce Tuck scored two goals each for Comox and Grant Kinapik was the other scorer.

Terry Ellison and Steve Mitchell scored the Fuller Lake goals.

Finland's Helsinki Jokers went down 5-2 to Prince George and were eliminated, along with Tampere Bobcats, also of Finland, who were crushed 7-2 by Whitehorse for their second straight defeat.

Today, Esquimalt was to play Saskatchewan Federation of Indians and Victoria was to play Port Alberni.

Stan Jones Bidding For Rolloff 'First'

Steady Stan Jones has a chance to chalk up a "first" when fivepinners go gunning for cash and trophies Sunday at Gibson's Bowladrome in the 10th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week rolloffs.

Jones who gained a rolloff berth, along with 25 other qualifiers, by winning men's fivep-in honors in the fourth week of this season's Bowler-of-the-Week contest, is in line to become the first to collect a third title. He won the rolloff crown in 1964, the inaugural year, and repeated the triumph in 1971.

Norm Goldie, now residing in Calgary, is the only other male fivepinner to capture two rolloff trophies.

Although Jones this season had a modest qualifying score of 876 for three games, he has a flock of spectacular tallies to his credit and he has made a habit of success in the pressure of tournament competition.

He'll have plenty of talented rivals in Sunday's event, including Dennis Swonnell, the only qualifier to break the "1,000 barrier" in the 26-week, Times-sponsored contest this season. Dennis rattled the pins for a 425-322-264—1,011 series in the 17th week.

All winners of Bowler-of-the-Week awards in four divisions — men's and women's fivepins, and men's and women's tenpins — qualified for the rolloffs.

All fivepinners will be rolling at Gibson's Sunday, starting at 1:30 p.m., while the tenpinners will hit the boards May 6 at Mayfair Lanes.

Each rolloff winner will receive a Times Trophy and any roloff champion who is a daily subscriber to the Victoria Times will receive a $100 bonus prize.

Another Deadlock

MEDICINE HAT — Medicine Hat Tigers and Saskatoon Blades appear to be having difficulty reaching any positive decision in their Western Canada Hockey League playoff final series.

Tigers and Blades fought to a 2-2 deadlock Tuesday before 4,490 fans after opening the series with a 4-4 tie Monday.

Winner of this series will be the first team to reach a total of eight points with two points given for a win and one for a tie.

The third and fourth games are scheduled for Thursday and Friday in Saskatoon.

Lanny McDonald and Ken Gassoff scored the Medicine Hat goals while Ralph Klassen and Dennis Abgrall replied for Saskatoon.

The teams both scored once in each of the final two periods and there was a total of 11 minor penalties, including six to Blades.

The major jolt to Medicine Hat came at 4:50 of the second period when defenceman Jim McCrimmon was handed a game misconduct by referee Terry Pierce. His loss left Tigers with three defencemen, one a rookie, for the remainder of the game.

Individual star of the game was Medicine Hat netminder Sam Clegg, who turned aside 36 shots, Ed Humphreys made 20 saves for Saskatoon.

YOUNG CHRIS CASH LEADER ON NET TOUR

NEW YORK (Reuter) — Chris Evert, 18, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was the leading money winner with $41,000 in women's winter tournaments sponsored by the United States Lawn Tennis Association.

She has won six of the seven tournaments she played while losing only once in 47 matches. Second was Evonne Goolagong of Australia, the only player to beat Miss Evert, with $23,000.

Spending Spree Fails

PALACE CRASHES

LONDON (CP) — Crystal Palace, which earlier this season spent $1.5 million on new players in three months for First Division survival, slid into the Second Division after losing, 2-1, to Norwich in English League soccer Tuesday.

An injury-time goal knocked Crystal Palace out of the First Division and virtually guaranteed Norwich's hold on a place in the same section. Almost certain to be relegated with Palace is West Bromwich Albion.

West Brom would have to win its two remaining games with Norwich failing to gain a point from the one match it has to come, to stand a chance of staying up. Norwich has 32 points, four more than West Brom and Palace, which has one game left.

Besides spending money on players, Palace appointed Manchester City boss Malcolm Alison as team manager a few weeks ago at $32,500 a year — a record salary for British soccer.

In four years in the First Division, the team never finished out of the bottom five.

Palace took the lead when Don Rogers scored on a penalty shot in the 27th minute. But Colin Suggett scored the tying goal eight minutes later, and with the match almost over, David Stringer headed in the goal which gave Norwich the win.

Brighton and Hove Albion is certain to finish at the bottom of the Second Division following a 2-0 defeat Tuesday by Queen's Park Rangers, second in the division. Leading Burnley stayed four points ahead with a 3-0 win over Luton Town.

PROGRESS TIED BY RED TAPE

OTTAWA (CP) — Government red tape and suspicion between government and industry are hampering Canadian technological innovation, says a study released today by the Science Council of Canada.

The study also says the first prime minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, and various Liberal governments are partly to blame for the present unhealthy state of the manufacturing industry.

Major recommendations include: Co-ordination of federal and provincial incentive programs; recognition of the value of small businesses; preference for domestic goods in government purchases; a second look at controversial proposed amendments to labor and competition legislation.

On the general relationship between government and industry, the study says: "The steadily increasing load of frustrations and interventions experienced by Canadian manufacturers" encourages the belief that "some politicians and public servants consider company managements to be basically dishonest and 'profit' a dirty word."

"Management people seem to believe that government sees itself more fitted than any other sector of Canadian society to decide what is good for industry and for society in general. They consider the federal capital, Ottawa, to be far removed physically and emotionally from the realities and the mainstream of Canadian economic life, and suspect that the economy as a whole will eventually be undermined by government planners who have never experienced the day-to-day pressures of business and have never met a production target, a delivery deadline or a payroll."

The study recommends more purchases of Canadian goods by all governments and more advanced warning of needs so that proper tenders could be prepared.

Another recommendation of the study is co-ordination and division of responsibility among governments in aid to industry.

"The federal government's financial assistance programs should be designed principally for whole industry sectors, for large projects, or for large companies. The provincial-local financial programs should deal with priorities within these jurisdictions, but should specialize in the provision of assistance for sub-sectors, small projects and small companies."

On the problem of selling Canadian products, the study notes that Canada is the only major exporter that is not a member of a trade bloc — except the disintegrating Commonwealth — and does not have a large domestic market.

"Canada will continue to be isolated unless it joins an existing bloc or becomes part of a new one with, say, the United States."

In an historical look at federal policy toward manufacturing, the study blames Macdonald, a Conservative, and unspecified Liberal governments.

"The national tariff policy of Conservative prime minister Sir John A. Macdonald is responsible — in part — for the present unhealthy state of manufacturing industry in this country.

"This policy permitted companies, many of which were foreign-owned, to grow up behind a tariff wall and to serve the domestic market with products designed and developed abroad."

Supervised Police Questioning Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — A system of supervised questioning of police suspects designed to provide greater protection of the rights of an accused has been proposed in a working paper of the Law Reform Commission of Canada.

"This proposal will inject a new integrity into the criminal justic system," says the paper, which is generally critical of the present pre-trial experience of accused persons as unfair and discriminatory.

The paper, released recently, is put out for discussion by the public and legal profession, with a view to eventually amending legislation.

The paper proposes police interrogate before an impartial third person.

But first it describes a pre-trial situation that is a far cry from what Canadians see on American and British detective shows on television.

It talks of questioning of suspects unaware of their rights to remain silent and to have a lawyer and of the "inherently coercive atmosphere" of police interrogation.

"The trial of the guilt or innocence of an accused in Canada can become . . . nothing more than appeal from his interrogation by police," it says.

"Canada has no guidelines describing the manner in which police should conduct their questioning and permitting the exclusion of confessions obtained if they are breached."

Pressures exerted in police questioning required confidence and self-assertion possessed by few. So the law in practice discriminated in favor of the sophisticated criminal "who is less likely to be intimidated and more able to weigh rationally the advantages of silence or co-operation in the particular situation."

The paper says accused have the right to remain silent in police questioning and in court in Canada. But on occasion this could be used against them.

Statements given involuntarily or taken illegally could not be used in trials but evidence gathered as a result of those statements could be. And an involuntary statement confirmed by subsequent facts could be used.

Having made criticisms such as that, the paper protests that statements made in response to police questioning can be used in court in the correct circumstances. But the fact that the accused chose to remain silent could not be used as circumstantial evident of guilt.

"Not only is this distinction irrational, but by permitting the accused to reserve this explanation or defence until the last moment, it may have the effect of depriving the court of important evidence that could otherwise be gathered and introduced by the prosecution to verify or rebut the accused's defence."

The paper suggests this system of supervised questioning before a "protective arbiter" whose prime function would be to assure that the accused knew his rights and to be "society's witness to the fairness of the questioning."

- Police may question a person about a crime, as at present. That person has the right to remain silent. No statement at this time is admissible in court.
- A person may be obliged to, or may request to, appear before an independent official for police questioning.
- The official will ensure the accused knows of his right to counsel and silence and will explain the exact crime with which he is charged. The accused may make a statement or refuse to make one or to answer police questions. He would be subject to the laws or perjury.

In this connection "an accused's refusal to answer proper and relevant questions would be noted and may also be used as evidence at trial" not only to weaken any defence, but "for the purpose of supplying an inference of guilt."

- Questioning before the public official would be in public, although there could be circumstances when the public should be excluded.

CONTROL VITAL TO SAVE FISH

CHARLOTTETOWN (CP) — Canadian control of its own continental shelf will be a major consideration for more than 300 delegates at the 28th annual meeting of the Fisheries Council of Canada here this week.

Council manager C. Gordon O'Brien of Ottawa said Tuesday the group has been pressuring for greater Canadian control over fishing off the continental shelf, but it still has not been resolved how the control would be administered.

"Suppose we get this control," he said, "how do you manage it?

"You can't do it unilaterally, so it probably has to be done through an international commission approach."

The issue will come up at the third United Nations law of the sea conference in New York this fall and discussions on it will continue in Santiago, Chile, next spring.

If the conference fails to find a solution, O'Brien said, then Canada should take unilateral action.

"We have to take unilateral action or face a serious problem of declining stocks. There isn't a species out there that we haven't a shortage of," he said.

O'Brien also saw a potential for greater use of pelagic fish such as herring, mackerel and especially caplin for human consumption.

He said caplin are largely ignored by the fishing industry, although a small number have been used in Newfoundland for fishmeal and oil.

O'Brien, who retires this summer after 22 years as the council's manager, viewed the outlook for the fishing industry as one of "cautious optimism."

The fisheries council opposed the ban on whaling imposed recently by Environment Minister Jack Davis, but O'Brien sees no hope of having the ban lifted.

No Early Garbage Pickup

Private garbage contractors in Saanich will be reminded of a municipal bylaw specifying collections be made after 7 a.m.

The decision by council's public works committee will be no comfort to Cypress Disposal Ltd., which earlier asked council to grant some relief from the bylaw to enable the firm to cover shopping centres before heavy traffic starts.

Brian Warburton, 880 Short, complained to Saanich of "one terrible noise first thing in the morning" by Cypress Disposal trucks making rounds before 6 a.m.

He said the vehicles made a "terrible racket that would jar you right out of your bed."

His house is near a commercial area on Saanich Road, one of several where tenants engage private garbage collection firms. The municipality also engages Cypress to do specialized pickup at commercial properties not adequately served by Saanich garbage department.

The trucks pick up large metal bins by a fork mechanism that raises them over the operator's cab and dumps them into the truck body at the rear.

Warburton said when they are in the raised position, the bins are agitated by the operator who pulls a lever in his cab that "shakes the blazes out of the bin" to add to the clamour.

He invited members of the committee to go out some morning and hear for themselves: "This is noise pollution."

He said he had complained to police and felt the racket contravened the municipal noise bylaw.

Chairman Ald. William Campbell said it is impossible for disposal firms to do their work in congested traffic periods and they need an early start to get all their work done.

Warburton said he did not feel the bylaw limiting times for garbage collection needed amendment, only that pickups be ordered to start later.

He said the trucks had done its collection near his house by 6:45 a.m. Good Friday. On Boxing Day the visit was between 5:30 and 5:45, he said, and three times in the last week collection was before 7 a.m.

NADER TEAM HITS CHRYSLER MANIFOLDS

WASHINGTON (CP) — Ralph Nader's public interest research group said Tuesday it has evidence that Chrysler Corp. has a severe problem with exhaust manifolds on its 1970-1972 cars.

Chrysler said it was a warranty matter and the problem has been corrected.

Clarence M. Ditlow, a Nader associate, sent letters to the National Highway Transportation Safety Agency and the Environmental Protection Agency urging them to investigate the impact on safety and air pollution.

Ditlow said Nader has received 25 complaints of exhaust manifold failure. He said a search of safety agency files turned up 24 other complaints.

In Detroit, a Chrysler spokesman said the matter concerns exhaust manifolds on six-cylinder cars.

"We have corrected the problem," he added.

CATHOLICS DIFFER WITH CHURCH

EDMONTON (CP) — The majority of Roman Catholics in Edmonton disagree with the Church's traditional teaching on birth control, the Western Catholic Reporter reported Tuesday.

A survey published by the paper showed more than 83 per cent of its readers polled felt the use of birth control methods can be morally right for catholic couples.

In addition, 88 per cent felt "there are some serious situations when an abortion should be allowed," and 43.6 per cent believed the decision should rest with the woman involved and her doctor.

More than 75 per cent said priests should be permitted to marry. And almost 70 per cent said they did not believe that divorced catholics who remarry outside the church are living in sin.

Land Cost Soaring

EDMONTON (CP) — Inflated land prices are causing the approximately 35 per cent increase in the city's equalized assessment, according to Tom Adams, the city economic affairs commissioner.

Adams told the Edmonton Separate School Board inflated land values and a lack of serviced lots have affected the province's formula for working out the city's 1973 equalized assessment.

Some land prices have doubled in the past few years.

The meeting was called by the board to consider the assessment increase, which will cost the average homeowner between $50 and $65 in property taxes this year.

The equalized assessment, calculated by the province under a formula based on each municipalities actual assessment, is used as a basis for determining how much each municipality must pay into the province's school foundation fund.

RAPID TRANSIT 'TOO COSTLY'

CALGARY (CP) — A full-scale rapid transit system is not warranted for the city because of high costs and a population of only 400,000, a University of Calgary transportation specialist claims.

Alternatives would be light rapid transit, as used now in Toronto, or the dial-a-bus system working in Regina, he said.

Sod-Turning Set

WINNIPEG (CP) — Sod-turning ceremonies will be held Thursday for a new buttress to the French identity in Western Canada, a $1,566,000 wing to house St. Boniface College's faculty of education.

Pensions Hiked

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba civil servants are to receive increased pension benefits and the right to retire at the age of 60 without penalty, Labor Minister Russ Paulley announced Tuesday. The present Civil Service Superannuation Act provides for retirement with full pension benefits at 65, and there is a 1.5 per cent penalty on benefits for each year of early retirement.

Uncle Ben Sues

EDMONTON (CP) — Ben Ginter's Red Deer brewery company filed suit in Alberta Supreme Court Tuesday against the Alberta Labor Department certification of an Edmonton-based union local to represent future employees.

The application also seeks to have court reversal of the board's ruling of 30 cases of unfair labor practices against the company ordered after men were laid off or dismissed.

SIGNAL FROM ABOVE

YORK, England (CP) — Passengers on a London-to-Newcastle express were shown the power of prayer when Rev. Robert Middlemiss realized the train would not be stopping at York station, his port of call en route. Middlemiss fell to his knees as the train neared York, praying it would slow down. To everyone's amazement, the train was halted for a few moments by a red signal only 100 yards from the station platform.

GUERRILLA MOVEMENT 'DEAD'

BEIRUT (AP) — The Libyan leader, Moammar Khadafy, says the Palestinian liberation movement is dead and predicts Israel will score another victory in any new war with the Arabs, a Beirut magazine reported today.

Khadafy, who has made frequent attacks against Israel and called on Arab countries to go to war to win back Palestine, said he has vowed to quit the "trial manoeuvres of Arab politics" once his country achieves its projected union with Egypt. He strongly implied that Arab leaders are all talk and no action.

The Beirut magazine Assayad, which printed the interview with the Libyan president today, expressed disbelief in his resolve to abandon politics. The magazine said Khadafy has made similar promises in deploring the lack of revolutionary fervor in the Arab world.

Surplus For U.S. Likely

OTTAWA (CP) — Statistics to be released soon on 1972 Canada-U.S. trade in munitions and military equipment may at least partially defuse one smouldering issue in relations between the two countries.

The statistics, whose release is about two weeks away, are expected to show a surplus in favor of the U.S. for the first time since 1966.

Under the 1959 Canada-U.S. defence production sharing agreement, both countries pledged to keep a rough balance in their military trade. Vietnam escalation, however, expanded U.S. purchases and by the end of 1971 Canada had accumulated a $544.6-million surplus.

From 1959 to 1971 inclusive, the U.S. bought $2.86 billion worth of defence goods in Canada. Those purchases included aircraft, components and electronic gear. In the same period, Canada bought $2.32 billion worth of military goods in the U.S.

Redress of this imbalance was one of the prime targets of U.S. negotiators in the fall of 1971 when they began a world-wide diplomatic offensive to gain trade concessions and reduce their balance of payments deficit.

Donald Macdonald, then defence minister, said he was under pressure from the U.S. government and manufacturers to buy a U.S. aircraft for Canadian long-range patrol operations to eliminate the imbalance. About 30 planes were needed and would cost $500 million.

No decision is expected on that purchase for another year or so, but recent statements indicate that the Canadian-built portions of the planes will be over 50 per cent.

Although it appears the imbalance will not be resolved by such a one-shot deal, there are indications it will be reduced by other means.

With U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam, U.S. consumption of munitions and military equipment has been falling.

At the same time, Canada's defence budget has been unfrozen and $2.5 billion may be spent over the next seven years on re-equipping Canadian forces.

Included in the program are $1.3 billion in fixed-wing aircraft, $300 to $500 million in helicopters, $100 million in vehicles and $200 million in ships.

Officials decline to say what the 1972 trade picture looks like, but one remarked that "hopefully, there will be some good news."

The statistics have been handled with some caution in the past because of their politically sensitive nature.

In 1969, authorities refused for the first time since the agreement was made to release official figures.

Informants said then that the subject was too sensitive in view of an expected Commons debate on Canadian foreign and defence policy and the fact that most Canadian armaments sold to the U.S. were for use in Vietnam.

As was announced later, those initially-suppressed figures showed a record for Canadian sales to the U.S. — $320 million — and a record Canadian surplus of $185.8 million.

In the first two years of the agreement, Canada had deficits — $11.9 million and $83.6 million.

In 1961 the agreement paid off with Canada's first surplus, $48.3 million, followed by a 1962 surplus of $126.9 million. There were deficits of $10 million in 1963 and $6.5 million in 1964, then a $129.4-million surplus in 1965.

After a $15.5-million deficit in 1966, and a $13.8-million surplus in 1967, there were two large surpluses — $185.8 million in 1968 and $128.3 million in 1969.

Vernon Bomb Sweep Promised

A battalion could be in Vernon within 10 days to conduct a thorough sweep for unexploded bombs, an armed forces spokesman said today in Victoria.

Maj. Vic Keating of CFB Esquimalt said elements of 2nd and 3rd battalions, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry from Victoria and Calgary could join Field Engineers from Chilliwack and Lord Strathcona Horse, Calgary, to form an 800-man sweep-up unit.

Explosive experts from Chilliwack are expected to return tonight from Vernon where they surveyed the range where two boys were killed two weeks ago after handling a mortar shell. Ten years ago two Boy Scouts died in a similar accident and a subsequent search of the grounds turned up 60 live explosives.

The three-man team will report its findings Thursday to military authorities, who will determine the extent of the sweep needed.

A decision to sweep the four square miles was made at the defence ministry level although the forces earlier said the action was not necessary.

Vernon city council, B.C. government and a petition by 2,000 Okanagan residents demanded the search.

NEW AIR ROUTE FOR VANCOUVER

Special to The Times

WASHINGTON — Agreement on new airlines routes, which would make it easier for western Canadians to fly to the United States, has been reached.

A senior U.S. government source here said that continuing negotiations between the two countries are certain to result in the following new routes from Western Canada: Winnipeg to Chicago, and Vancouver to Los Angeles.

Also a virtual certainty, he said, is a route between Chicago and Montreal, to be serviced by an American airline.

What other routes will be agreed upon is impossible to say at this time, he said.

Negotiations between the Canadian and U.S. governments with the airlines attending as observers have been going on since 1969.

Lethal Clams

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Frederick McGinnis, Alaska's health and social services commissioner, has warned that "extremely lethal" clams have been found in the Juneau area.

McGinnis said laboratory tests on clams dug at Eagle River disclosed concentrations of a poison 20 times greater than the minimum dose considered fatal in most cases.

Secret Agents Push Union

TORONTO (CP) — Undercover agents are found only in cloak-and-dagger movies produced in Hollywood. Right?

Wrong. The Association of Commercial and Technical Employees (ACTE) has plenty of them located in offices throughout Metropolitan Toronto.

ACTE launched a campaign last Jan. 25 to organize the 250,000 office workers in Toronto not represented by unions.

The process is a slow one, and the union is assembling as many "under-cover" workers as possible in offices to try to interest fellow workers into joining the union.

The strategy is beginning to pay off. ACTE announced early in April that it has filed its first application with the Ontario Labor Relations Board for certification as a bargaining agent for a unit of white collar workers—122 Toronto employees of the Canadian Underwriters Association.

The association, a co-operative owned by 60 general insurance companies, rates and inspects insurance risks. The application will be heard by the board April 26.

STU WAS HELPED

ACTE has relied chiefly on billboard advertising to recruit potential members. One such ad—a subway placard—reads:

"Stu, the insurance clerk. The only breaks he seemed to get were coffee breaks. ACTE helped Stu. And you? Give us a call, we'll give you a voice."

The placards have rip-off business reply cards for white-collar workers wanting further information about the union.

Art Kube, a staff representative of the Canadian Labor Congress and co-ordinator of the organizing effort, reported he's "more than pleased" with the 2,000 inquiries ACTE —a congress affiliate—has had since it began its drive.

He said ACTE workers are receiving about 60 inquiries a day—telephone calls, mailed-in business reply cards and persons just dropping into the office.

But there are problems.

Judith Adam, an ACTE worker, said white-collar workers seeking information about the union all "have some sense of apprehension about getting involved.

"None of them come on full of spirit, really, because they're already beaten. They've been beaten for years."

She said they are apprehensive and feel if they fight against their employer, "it will dispose of them, and they can't afford to be disposed of because they've got families, car payments."

"They always have the suspicion they're doing something underhanded and clandestine and that they're being, to a certain extent, disloyal to their employer," said Bill Howes, another ACTE organizer. "And you have to alleviate these fears and guilt feelings."

ACTE officials tell interested office workers or "under-cover" agents to keep their noses clean during the organizing period and there is little chance of being fired.

None of the under-cover employees will reveal their full names. They feel the longer they can continue organizing fellow workers without the company learning what's going on, the better their chances of winning certification as a bargaining unit of ACTE.

ACTE officials say the main complaint of white - collar workers is wages.

Sask. Delays Lowering Consent Age

REGINA (CP) — The law amendments committee of the legislature today delayed approval of a bill to lower the age of consent to 16 from 18 for those seeking medical treatment.

The committee met in hopes of hearing submissions on the bill from the Saskatchewan Medical Association and the Saskatchewan College of Physicians and Surgeons but the two groups failed to appear.

Opposition leader D. G. Steuart called the medical profession's refusal to appear a "poor show." He moved the motion to delay approval of the bill.

Steuart said some MLAs have reservations about the amendments, particularly one which would allow unmarried girls aged 16 or more to obtain contraceptive devices through physicians without getting parental consent.

700,000 Viets Orphaned

By RAY DICK

SAIGON (CP) — He was only 10 years old but his face carried the lines of a lifetime and his pleading eyes the burden of survival.

Squatting naked on the pavement in the hot afternoon sun, he wanted money, but he seemed almost too weak to ask.

Beside him there, dressed only in a soiled undershirt, was his young brother, stretched on the sidewalk, his eyes closed and his frail body covered with insects.

He didn't move. His eyes remained shut even when some passerby threw coins in their direction.

The youngest was four years old, but had the wasted body and bloated stomach of a starving infant. The older brother was the size of a four-year-old.

It was a scene that would stagger the Canadian mind, but a common occurrence in the poverty-stricken streets of this war-crippled country.

"It is estimated there are 700,000 orphans in South Vietnam," said Gardner Munro, a senior American aid official. "Only about 19,000 of them are in orphanages."

The others are not all homeless waifs, making their living in the streets and sleeping in culverts, packing crates and back alleys where some of them die.

"The Vietnamese family has strong ties," said Munro. "Many of the orphans are being looked after by other families, especially in the country areas."

It is in the cities, mostly Saigon, where the traditional family ties have broken down and children are abandoned to make their own way. Only the strong and the lucky survive.

"We estimate there are about 6,000 homeless children, or those that might as well be homeless, in the streets," Munro said.

Their plight contrasts sharply with the children in the 123 registered orphanages throughout the country, who go to school dressed in neat, clean uniforms and with full stomachs.

But only about 50 per cent of those in the orphanages are true orphans, Munro said. In many cases when one parent is killed, the other will bring the children to the orphanages to be cared for.

Some of them know they are unable to provide and others just don't want to try.

"What we really need is to find ways to make it possible for these children to return to families," he said. "Our primary concern is with the infants."

Munro told of one maternity hospital in Saigon that about a year ago averaged about 60 abandoned babies a month.

Two social workers have been placed in the hospital and now the average is down to five or six a month.

"The social workers quickly learned to spot the mothers who had abandonment in mind," he said. "They didn't knit any baby booties and had no visits from boy-friends.

"All they needed was someone to talk to . . . to give them a little encouragement."

Social welfare programs, along with establishment of day care centres are pre-natal and post-natal clinics across the country, are being stressed by the South Vietnamese government.

Cost of such programs, as with the orphanages, is shared by the government, the U.S. aid program and several international social service organizations.

But the waifs on the streets are a different problem.

Several programs have been started to get the children at least a decent place to sleep and some personal attention.

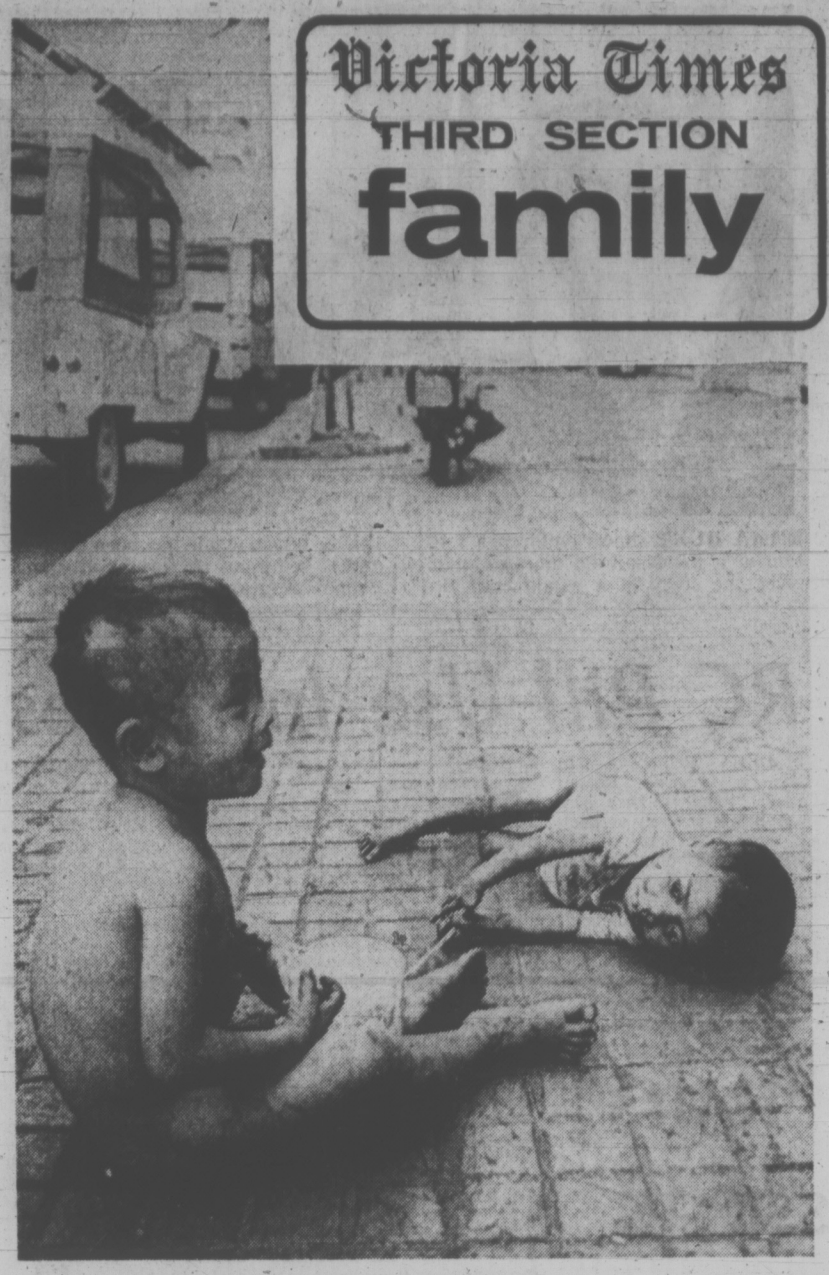
One such program, operated by a New York group, involves getting the homeless boys off the streets and into the shoe-shining business. Shoe-shine kits are provided and shelters are set up so they can sleep indoors.

There are some, however, that even this program can't reach.

One "regular" in downtown Saigon hobbles with the aid of a crutch, one leg amputated above the knee, his face and body horribly burned by napalm. He sells fancy headbands to the few who will buy.

"Nobody could say the level care for all is satisfactory," said Munro. "The war has caused havoc, and has been the first priority of the South Vietnamese government up to now.

"But it is ever so much better than it was when I first came here in 1966."



LIVING ON STREET, these boys beg in Saigon to keep alive. The youngest, four years old, has wasted body and bloated stomach of a starving infant and older brother, 10 years old, is size of a four-year-old. It is estimated there are 700,000 orphans in South Vietnam — with only about 19,000 of them in orphanages. About 6,000 are altogether homeless.

National Body Formed To Champion Youth

TORONTO (CP) — Children have acquired a champion.

The Canadian Council of Children and Youth (CCCY) has begun a complex, long-term program that combines research and pressure for action when that seems necessary.

Margery King, the group's executive secretary, says it has worked as a consciousness-raising organization but now is prepared to take a stance on problems facing kids.

"We will be asking what is society's responsibility to children. The whole issue we're really concerned about is whether we regard them as human beings or as possessions of their parents."

The CCCY is a national voluntary organization formed in 1958 primarily to organize conferences and seminars to bring together social work, medical and education personnel as well as voluntary groups that work with children and youth.

CCCY President Patricia Mac Kay says the council now considers that more is required.

Information in various areas will be collected and appraised and might be handled in a number of ways.

King said: "We might use it as consciousness-raising material for members or decide that this is an area where council should move into active advocacy. We might press for legislative change or new services or for changes in the handling of existing services."

The organization's first project, co-ordinated by Dr. Sydney Segal of Vancouver, is child battering and corporal punishment of children.

King said: "We thought we would start on an obvious area, where children are in jeopardy."

Mrs. MacKay said corporal punishment in schools will be a part of the study.

Another project is a look at the wellbeing of children in "alternative forms of care," such as foster homes or institutions.

Project co-ordinator is Dr. James Albert of Ottawa.

Mrs. MacKay said: "Children rarely have any say as to what rappens to them under these circumstances. We will look at who is acting on behalf of the children."

CCCY will study the legal rights of the child. There will be projects on the quality of children's television, on infant health, on professional education and on the child and sports and physical fitness.

Mrs. MacKay said the organization will ask whether children are being expolited in heavily organized junior sports.

"Is there too much emphasis on excellence rather than on physical fitness? King is on the planning body for a meeting to be held at Queen's University in Kingston in May."

King says the CCCY has some federal funds, and hopes to raise more around each specific project.

Poultry Climb Goes Slower

OTTAWA (CP) — At a time when the price of protein from four-legged animals is busting the budgets of many shoppers, penny-wise consumers are looking to two-legged meat — poultry.

Not that the birds have been immune to the general rise of food prices. Poultry prices have climbed by 18.5 per cent in a year — a smaller increase than pork, but a higher rate of advance than beef.

In the last decade, however, poultry prices have advanced by a smaller percentage than other meats — just two per cent compared with 3.6 per cent for all meats, the consumer price index shows.

But in that same period, poultry sold in the shop has altered so it needs different treatment, says Marie Slusar, home economist with the good advisory services of the federal agriculture department.

Take turkey, now that it's not the high-priced Christmas or Thanksgiving seasons. Your roasting timetables may be out of date, Mrs. Slusar says.

Oven times in older cookbooks applied to good old, tasty free-ranging turkeys, those which ran free in the barnyard and grew naturally.

Nowadays, most turkeys in supermarket freezers have been bred and raised by factory methods, strictly confined and forcefed to get to market fast.

Further, they have been injected in breast or legs or both with butter or vegetable oil to make them more plump, succulent and marketable.

After a long series of experiments, Mrs. Slusar has come up with a new list of roasting times for turkey — the big one, at least. Traditionally oven times for an eight-pounder are okay today, but modern 16-pounders need 15 minutes less than traditionally, 20-pounders almost two hours less.

She proposes, at an oven temperature of 325 degrees, 3¾ to 4½ hours for an eight-pound bird, 5¼ to 6 hours for a 16-pounder, 5¾ to 6½ hours for a 20-pounder.

Other discoveries in the turkey tests:

Only about 40 per cent of what you pay for in a turkey by pound is edible. A 20-pound turkey produces only eight pounds of meat, exclusive of skin, giblets and neck.

Weight loss in cooking is about 24 per cent and thawing a frozen bird before that reduces the weight by anywhere from one to four per cent.

To thaw properly before cooking, the turkey should spend five hours a pound in a 40-degree refrigerator temperature.

DIETICIAN ON LINE

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — The executive committee of the Ontario Dietetic Association has approved plans to expand its public information program on food and nutrition.

The committee has decided to offer a question-and-answer food-fact column to Ontario newspapers and to seek financial support to expand a dial-a-dietician service.

Ann Diamond, president of the 600-member association, said: "We have been concerned about the state of public knowledge about food and nutrition and we wish to do something positive about it."

She said several newspapers have indicated support for the food and nutrition column.

SWIMSUIT RENTERS SHOW TRUE COLORS

A swim at the Crystal Pool may sooth housewives' nerves but it can't do much for their egos if they wear more than a size 12 and need to rent a bathing suit.

Most women like to keep their clothing size, like their age, a secret. But at the Crystal all are revealed in their true colors.

Bathing suits are color coded for size starting at a slimming shade of brown for wearers of size 10. As sizes grow larger, colors grow brighter, culminating in bright pink for size 18.

The man responsible for all those size 18s hiding in the deep end of the pool is Crystal Pool's manager Bill Young.

Young said Tuesday that he assigned each size a color because it would be more "convenient for staff" and chose colors arbitrarily from a catalogue.

He didn't know that, although size 10s may enjoy wearing bright colors, most of the larger sizes would prefer a slimming, dark color — and their anonymity.

Indian Legends Carry Message

An exciting school program, sponsored by the education division of the provincial museum came to an end for the season last week.

It was designed and organized to give today's children from kindergarten to Grade 5, authentic knowledge and a better understanding of how Indian boys and girls in the same age group, lived and learned, long ago.

Put together under the watchful eyes of Wilma Wood, director of the museum's education services, and her assistant, Shirley Cuthbertson, this program was headed by Emma Hunt, a descendant of a proud West Coast Indian family.

With her were a corps of museum volunteer teachers (docents) that included Hazel Hall, Elizabeth Carter, Anna Reeves, Elizabeth Clement and June Singleton — all with good knowledge of Indian lore.

They started out last October. Since then, the program has been repeated every Tuesday and Thursday, (barring holidays), as many as four times in a day.

Visits were made to schools as far away as Crofton and Koksilah, also in Colwood, on the Saanich Peninsula, Saturna Island where children from Mayne Island were present, and in the Greater Victoria area.

A fascinating fable on the Tse-shaht People, from George C. Clutesi's book, Son of Raven Son of Deer, was used as a continuing theme.

It described the greed of Ko-ishin-mit, Son of Raven, his effort to obtain a big hissit (sockeye salmon) by copying the method of Son of Eagle, and how he failed and was made the laughing stock of the village.

Emma Hunt, in the role of an Indian grandmother, narrated the fable, as children in the various classes sat in a circle at her feet.

Then, with the help of volunteers, the boys and girls acted out the tale, as they visioned it from what Mrs. Hunt has said.

Last week I saw the final program, in a kindergarten class at Margaret Jenkins School. And while the mime and dialogue may not have been as finished as it would have been in a Grade 5 class, enthusiasm made up for any other lack.

A river twisted its way (in imagination) over the classroom floor. A small lad, covered with a grey blanket, was a rock that near-sighted Son of Raven would eventually mistake for a salmon, from his perch in a high tree.

Four little girls were chosen to swoop and flutter along the river as swallows. Four active small boys to wiggle their way up that river as salmon.

One tall lad, dressed in an authentic blanket and eagle headdress, from the museum's treasure chest of authentic artifacts, had the part of Son of Eagle.

Another, robed in colorful blanket and mask, was ready to act as Son of Raven.

Other children sat in a group as villagers, waiting to shout with laughter when Son of Raven was knocked out and his beak bent and bruised by the rock.

Finally the show was on the road. Swallows fluttered. Salmon wiggled. Son of Raven wheedled and boasted. His little wife Pash-hook (daughter of the squirrel) hopped, skipped and jumped at her husband's bidding.

Son of Eagle caught his salmon and saved Son of Raven from drowning when he mistook the rock for a big hissit and was knocked out.

The villagers shouted, jeered and laughed. "Ahhh!" they said, "Ko-ishin-mit has done it again!"

Final stage of the program saw the volunteers showing the children a selection of ancient Indian artifacts, including a herring rake, good luck canoe paddle, woven baskets and hats, masks, stone work tools and old-time pictures taken of long houses and ancient villages.

Interest, even at this kindergarten level, remained throughout the hour-long presentation. And, as classroom teacher Sylvia Chatfield said later, "even those who appear to be the least interested will have observed and they will have a lot to say when we talk about the Indian story again."

That, of course, is what Wilma Wood and Shirley Cuthbertson, Emma Hunt and the volunteers, were working toward.

A continuing interest that will see boys and girls eager to learn more about Indian children who, as George Clutesi says in the preface to his book, learned a long time ago "through the medium of the tales . . . of the closeness of man to all animal, bird life and the creatures of the sea . . . and that there was a place in the sun for all living things."

EMMA HUNT shows children a section of a hand-painted diorama that gives the story of a whale hunt. In this instance, whale has been beached and is being cut up for the villagers. School program ended last week.

RC Pill Use Increases

MADRID (Reuter) — In Spain, a staunchly Roman Catholic country where contraception is severely restricted, more and more women are taking the "pill," authoritative reports just released here show.

A government department, in a written answer to a parliamentary question, said that in 1969 a total of 120,000 Spanish women took the pill.

Medical specialists who have been doing their own calculations say 180,000 Spanish women now are using this form of contraception. One leading gynecologist says the current figure may well be 800,000.

The reports have taken many Spaniards by surprise.

Strict laws throughout Spain ensure that no publicity is given for contraceptive devices of any kind. They may be obtained only with a doctor's prescription on purely medical grounds.

The Roman Catholic Church continues to frown on use of mechanical or oral contraceptive devices, upholding the "rhythm method" and abstention as the acceptable alternative.

The department of health says 1,739,544 anti-birth pills were made in Spain in 1969. It was on this basis that the department calculated 120,000 women took the pill with some regularity that year. The calculation did not appear to take into account the use of pills that may have been manufactured abroad and imported clandestinely.

The figures, coupled with others from the official demographic projections for four years ago, meant that one out of every 79 Spanish women of child-bearing age was on the pill in 1969.

Also on record is the Spanish birth rate. The health department says it is declining.

At the turn of the century, there were some 34 live births for every 1,000 inhabitants, but by 1970 the rate was estimated provisionally at just under 20, the department said.

Use of Wholewheat Flours Adds Texture to Desserts

By HILDA BEASTALL

When you have a five pound bag of unbleached flour and one of wholewheat flour on hand, you find you are wanting more recipes using these ingredients because the cakes, cookies and other delicious foods made with them soon become favorites for their flavor and texture.

A dessert good enough to be considered as part of the total meal values instead of just a sweet nothing to come at the end is not only easy to make but inexpensive too.

Baked in a two-inch glass dish 13 by eight inches, or something comparable (or two smaller dishes to keep one in freezer after baking), this recipe for Moist Apple Dessert makes 10 generous servings.

MOIST APPLE DESSERT

1 c. unbleached flour
1 c. wholewheat flour
2 Tbsp. wheat germ
1 tsp. powdered brewer's yeast
½ tsp. salt
½ c. margarine
¼ c. brown sugar (loose)
2 small eggs
¼ c. powdered skim milk
¼ c. water (approx.)

Cream margarine with sugar and eggs; add powdered milk and water together. Sift in all the dry ingredients and mix with a wooden spoon until blended, but do not beat.

Into the greased dish, spoon two-thirds of the batter mixture, spreading evenly over bottom and up sides. Reserve the rest for topping.

Over the batter spread an inch layer of thinly sliced apples. I used Spartons just recently, they were just right for flavor. Over the apples, grate (or grind) about one teaspoon of hard Chinese sugar. Then quickly cover with remaining one-third of batter mixture to prevent discoloration of apple slices. A dribble of dark molasses over the top makes a good finish.

Bake for about 25 minutes in a 400 degs. oven, or 30 minutes at 375 degs.

Chinese sugar comes in solid small bars. It is economical because so little is needed to give an effect of sweetness without the pervading sweetness of regular sugar.

Serve this Apple Dessert warm from the oven. For a second meal, I sometimes mix a tablespoon of cold liquid coffee with a teaspoon of molasses and pour around the edges before re-heating in the oven. This adds a slightly different flavor, at the same time preventing the edges from becoming dry.

And, for the record, the unspecified amount of water mentioned in my Monday recipe for Carrot Pudding is 1½ cups.

Free for the Asking

By HARRIET HART

Every year the average Canadian consumes about eight pounds of beans of various sizes, shapes and color. Most of the small white pea beans, which are also known as navy beans, are produced in Ontario. Yellow-eyed beans grow in the Maritimes, while red kidney beans and green lima beans are grown across the country.

The eight-page Beans booklet tells you how beans are sold in retail stores and how to prepare them.

With the quick-soak method, add 6 cups of cold water to 2 cups of beans, cover and bring to the boil. Cook for two minutes. Then remove from heat and let stand for one hour. Don't discard the soaking water. It contains valuable vitamins and minerals.

If you want to avoid foam from developing during cooking, for each cup of beans add one tablespoon of fat to the water.

Among the nutritious dishes this booklet features is a quick supper chili in which canned beans are used. There is also a delicious recipe for Baked Beans Quebec style. Baking time is 6-7 hours.

Another tasty recipe is a Combination Bean Salad. It calls for canned green, wax, lima and kidney beans and other readily available ingredients.

Hand That Rocks Cradle Has Chance to Rock Boat

PARIS (AP) — Women will hold the key command posts and men will serve in subordinate roles on a raft as it drifts next month across the Atlantic from Europe to the Americas.

A Swedish woman captain, Maria Bjornstrom, and an American woman navigator, Marg Gidley, will head the raft Acali in a study of friction between men and women when traditional roles are reversed and nationalities and cultures jumbled. The crew will have seven women and six men from 12 countries.

Anne Turner, a psychologist in Paris who helped to recruit the crew, said in an interview:

"The men will be doing subordinate things like taking pictures and doing the cooking. The woman captain has absolute charge of the raft, a woman diver will be responsible for repairs, and two women doctors will be making sure everyone stays alive.

"The odd-numbered crew may be an element in making tensions. Married people were chosen because this fact presents a whole range of problems that the crew will have to come to terms with.

Sexuality is a part of the study, but not the prime area.

There will be frictions enough as it is."

The organizer of the expedition is Santiago Genoves, a Mexican anthropologist who was a member of Thor Heyerdahl's Ra expeditions. He will make his own study of behavior on the raft and a government-owned Mexican television station, which has put up $160,000 toward Acali's costs, will film the trip.

The trip is expected to take between three and six months with departure from the Canary Islands between May 1 and 15th. The raft is expected to wash up somewhere along the Yucatan Peninsula.

While the expedition is going on, Mrs. Turner said, psychologists will be checking the families the crew has left behind.

Woman on Men's Track Team

COOS BAY, Ore. (UPI) — Ted and Fran Sichting look just like any other young married couple, enjoying life and having a good time.

But they're not quite like any other couple.

Fran is believed to be the only female athlete in the country competing on a man's team against men in intercollegiate track. Mrs. Sichting is a member of the Southwestern Oregon Community College track team.

Fran competes in the 100 and 220 yard dashes, the long jump and as "the anchor man" on the Lakers' 440 yard relay team. The relay team has scored five victories this season and recently set a school record of 44.2 seconds. In seven meets, the 5-foot-8 freshman has scored 26 points for her school in individual and relay events.

What does her husband think about all the running with the men?

"It's all right with me," said the ex-marine. "She enjoys it and I enjoy watching her."

Ted is proud of his wife and attends most of the meets when he's not working as a logger in the timber country which surrounds this area.

Asked about her track ambitions, Fran said she is "not ruling out a chance for the Olympics in 1976."

"I'll just have to see how I do," she said. "If, after I finish here at the community college and my coach, Mike Hodges, thinks I'm international calibre, then I'll continue to work out with my sights on the Olympics. But if not, I'll just run to keep in shape."

Hodges, when asked about his female star, said, "Let's put it this way. When they open the Olympic games in Montreal in 1976, I think Fran will be in the parade and I'll be in the stadium crying my eyes out with happiness for her."

"I feel that she was good enough to go last year, and she's much stronger now than she was then."

Fran is the No. 2 sprinter on her team with a best time of 10.6 seconds in the 100 and 23.7 in the 220. She also has long jumped 19-7½ and is improving rapidly.

The high school from which Fran was graduated last year, Marshfield in Coos Bay, has a good track tradition. It produced Steve Prefontaine, currently American's top distance runner and a senior at the University of Oregon. Prefontaine finished fourth in the 5,000 meters in the Munich olympics and is considered a prime candidate for the 1976 games in Montreal.

She's a very busy young lady these days.

Her day begins at about 5 a.m. when she gets up, fixes breakfast for her husband and gets him off to work. Then she does her house work before going to school. After school she practices for a couple of hours before going home to fix supper.

Being the only girl on the team, Fran has to take her share of the kidding, but that doesn't bother her in the least, "because she's a good team man," says Hodges.

Other members of the team seem as if they are brothers to her, as well as teammates and other than being the prettiest member of the squad they treat her like "one of the boys."

"They made me the official water boy for the team," Fran said with a broad grin. "I guess that's because I always bring a canteen to practice."

In high school last year Fran won individual titles in the 100-yard dash, the 220 and the long jump and ran anchor for Marshfield's winning 880-yard medley relay girls team.

She scored more points in the girls' state meet than any team, other than her own, which beat her by a half point, and she holds the national long jump record for girls with a leap of 19-6¾.

'Female Is Superior'

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Anthropologist Ashley Montagu told a college audience this week his studies have convinced him "that the female in the human species is in all respects superior to the male."

This is partly proven, he said, by the fact that women are able "to maintain the male in the illusion of his superiority" and "to make him feel when they are married that indeed he is the master of the house when in fact, as everybody knows, he is nothing more or less than the chairman of the entertainment committee."

Hope for Heavies

DEAR ABBY: My name is Albert and I am a compulsive overeater. Three years ago I weighed 305 pounds. I was in debt to the tune of $8,000, my marriage was on the rocks, and I was about to lose my job. Overeating was the cause of all my problems, but I didn't know it then.

I had tried reducing clubs three times, diet doctors, quack doctors, shots, pills, and even hypnosis. One diet doctor put me on pills and shots and I lost 100 pounds in seven months. In less than six months I had put it all back on again. (It cost me $1,500.)

Then someone told me about Overeaters Anonymous and I went to a meeting. There were signs all over the place saying, "We Care."

Abby, I have never met a more loving, caring bunch of people in my life. I couldn't believe it. The only requirement to join "O.A." is a desire to stop eating compulsively. There are no dues, and nobody is weighed in, or humiliated. You don't even have to attend meetings if you don't want to. I can only tell you that after that first meeting I felt that God had sent me there.

Today, I weigh 180 pounds, am debt free, have money in the bank, and my marriage is more secure than ever. I've even returned to my church where I was ashamed to go for years because I felt so unworthy.

Overeaters Anonymous is strictly that. No last names are used, but I will sign mine and you may check me out. That organization has done so much for me I want to let others know about it so they can be born again. Because that's what happened to me. — ALBERT.

DEAR ALBERT: Not only did I check you out, I personally spoke with several members of "O.A." and every word you wrote is true. Anyone interested in learning more about this wonderful organization (there are chapters all over) may write to: Overeaters Anonymous, P.O. Box 2613, Hollywood, Calif. 90028.

□

DEAR ABBY: My husband has made it plain that he prefers the television set to me. Several of my women friends have the same complaint. What could be the reason for this? — Ignored.

DEAR IGNORED: Maybe it's because he can turn off the television when he wants to.

□

DEAR ABBY: We have been married for 26 years. My wife works by choice, not because she has to.

Every morning she gets up at 5 a.m. Her office hours do not begin until 8 a.m. and we live only 20 minutes from her office, so you see there is no need for her to get up at that hour.

Here is the clincher: She bathes, dresses, and sits in the kitchen playing solitaire from 5:40 until it's time to leave for the office. It's been the same every morning with the exception of Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays. Am I married to some kind of nut? — Wondering.

DEAR WONDERING: What's nutty about your wife's routine if she isn't able to sleep beyond 5 a.m.? If she doesn't disturb you, why complain?

□

CONFIDENTIAL TO "Puzzled in Hope": You are under no obligation to send the price of a gift instead of a gift. People who ask for cash instead of wedding gifts are presumptuous. (Suggestion: Why don't you and six other people get together and send Amy Vanderbilt's new book on etiquette? I can think of no gift more appropriate.)

Intimidation Used On U.K. Servants

LONDON (AP) — One of Britian's leading Sunday newspapers reports some Philippine girls who come here as servants are being forced by their British employers to work long hours for low pay.

Celia Haddon, writing in the Sunday Times, says the girls are "easily frightened by threats of deportation and do not know where to turn for help if they wish to change their jobs."

"There is no check on the agencies either in this country or in the Philippines which last year recruited 1,600 girls to work here as domestic servants. Inevitably the system breeds abuses."

She said the Philippine girls were being made to accept hours and pay that "would not be tolerated by English girls."

Miss Haddon cited the case of a girl who ran away after working six weeks without pay was found bruised and shaking in a telephone booth. The report said others fared better, receiving as much as $20 a week plus room and board.

Welfare Plan Compromise

The original federal-provincial winter works plan is the best solution to the Saanich welfare problem, members of council's social services committee decided Tuesday.

Aldermen rejected several other proposals before deciding on the compromise motion to send to next month's annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities.

Council had instructed the committee to frame a resolution after Ald. Leslie Passmore suggested there was municipal work which unemployed-employable welfare recipients might do in exchange for their dole.

He said the obstacle to requiring work for welfare is a federal regulation to the effect that if a person is on welfare he "must be paid to not work."

Municipal welfare administrator John Gibson confirmed that under the old winter works scheme all employable welfare recipients had work to do. The work could be planned in advance by the municipal departments requiring casual help.

The scheme also started early enough in the season to take full advantage of senior government assistance.

Gibson said the welfare department's current incentive allowance program helps to employ a number of women on welfare, but it seemed more suitable for office employment.

He said there is a new scheme which he would like to see attempted in Saanich. It enables a welfare recipient to be employed by the municipality at regular wages including all fringe benefits and deductions. This would cost the municipality the net difference between that salary and tha man's normal welfare allotment.

But he said it would be cheaper for the municipality to pay the man $102 a month (welfare) than to pay him $500 while he learned a new job.

One of the conditions of the scheme is that the work be a new program and that the men be employed full-time for at least a month.

Municipal administrator W. M. Tremayne said it would mean having to foresee the requirement well in advance.

"On the face of it," said chairman Ald. Edith Gunning, "we have a welfare bill we can't afford, and we are offered a program we can't afford."

She said she favored getting men back to work, "but I'm not in favor of singling out welfare recipients and saying 'you get out here and dig a ditch'."

"Is there anything degrading about digging a ditch?" Passmore asked.

"No, I've done it myself on occasion . . . I'm in favor of work programs, but I'm not in favor of the labor camp concept," the chairman said.

MORE OIL TANKERS

SEATTLE (AP) — Construction of an oil-transmission line across Canada might cause more tanker traffic on Puget Sound than the proposed trans-Alaska pipeline, Democratic representative Lloyd Meeds said Tuesday.

Any trans-Canada pipeline would have to have a spur line to serve the refinery complex at Cherry Point in Whatcom County, he said.

Tankers carrying crude oil to California refineries would take on cargo at Cherry Point rather than at Valdez, the terminus of the proposed trans-Alaska pipeline.

Meeds said if the Alaska line is built, four-fifths of the oil would be carried to California in super tankers sailing 200 miles off the coast. The remainder, he said, would be loaded on smaller tankers for delivery to the Arco refinery at Cherry Point.

Senator Henry Jackson said the movement of Alaskan oil into this country "has to happen. We need the line to Valdez . . ."

The nation's energy goal must be to achieve "a capability of self-sufficiency" in petroleum in 1983, Jackson said.

He predicted gasoline would cost $1 a gallon within three years if the U.S. gets into an oil-price crunch because of failure to build up its reserves.

$673,000 EYED FOR SEWERS

Sewer projects estimated at $673,000 were recommended by public works committee to Saanich council Tuesday as part of the closing phase of the municipalitiy's first sewer enterprise program.

The largest at $290,000 would cover 22,000 feet of pipe for the Tyndall-Torquay area of north Gordon Head.

A $250,000 project would install 11,000 feet of pipe on the Swan Lake-Blenkinsop trunk.

Two smaller expenditures would be for $90,000 in Braefoot Park area for a pumphouse and 600 feet of pipe, and $43,000 for 3,000 feet of pipe in the McKenzie-Saanich Road area.

Engineer Bob Daye said extensive staff work is already under way for the second major sewer undertaking in Saanich, extension of the enterprise area north to Royal Oak.

Eight Murders Confessed

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (UPI) — A hulking young man who killed his grandparents nine years ago has confessed to eight recent slayings in the Santa Cruz area, including the hammer-beating death of his mother.

Edmund Kemper, 24, a 6-foot-9 laborer, called authorities in Santa Cruz — the "murder capital of the world" — Tuesday from Pueblo, Colo., where he was arrested while still talking in the phone booth.

Santa Cruz County deputies went to his mother's home in nearby Aptos and found her body and that of a visiting friend. Kemper said he beat both women to death with a hammer, but his mother's body was decapitated and one hand was cut off.

"I'm glad he didn't decide to resist arrest," said Pueblo police chief Robert Mayber. "He's big enough to beat a mountain lion with a switch." He said two rifles, a shotgun and a pistol were found in Kemper's car.

Santa Cruz County District Attorney Peter Chang and homicide detectives flew to Colorado to question Kemper about the slaying of his mother, her friend, and six college coeds. Officers said he confessed all eight slayings during the phone call.

Kemper shot and stabbed his grandparents to death while living with them at North Fork, Calif., in 1964, and then called his divorced mother to tell her about the slayings. He was released on parole to his mother from Atascadero State Hospital at the age of 21.

Deputies found the bodies of Kemper's mother, Mrs. Clarenell Strandberg, 52, and her friend, Sara Taylor Hallett, 59, at Mrs. Strandberg's apartment in Aptos.

Sheriff Douglas James said both women were apparently killed last Saturday night. Mrs. Hallett was reported missing Monday by her son.

Kemper also admitted slaying six college coeds in the Santa Cruz area in recent months. Portions of the bodies of five of the girls have been discovered.

There have been 18 killings in the Santa Cruz area this year, leading Chang to call it "the murder capital of the world." Another man, Herbert W. Mullin, 25, of Felton, Calif., has been charged with 10 of the slayings.

Washington 'Stifling' Hunt For Creative Cancer Cures

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In a still secret report, the U.S. National Academy of Science's Institute of Medicine says the government plan to conquer cancer will stifle the scientific creativity needed to find cures for the disease.

The institute report accused the federal cancer planners of trying to direct all reaearch from Washinton, when what is really needed "is an abundance of new ideas . . . (that) are most likely to emerge from the imagination and intuition of individual scientists."

The plan on how to conquer cancer, the institute report says, "leaves the impression that all shots can be called from a central headquarters; that all, or nearly all, of the important ideas are already in hand, and that given the right kind of administration and organization, the hard problems can be solved.

"It fails to allow for the surprises which must surely lie ahead if we are really going to gain an understanding of cancer."

The report, requested by the National Cancer Institute, was written by a nine-man committee of cancer experts headed by Dr. Lewis Thomax, dean of the Yale University medical school and the incoming president of the Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Centre in New York.

Specifically, the committee looked at the first two volumes of the national cancer program plan required under an 18-month-old law setting up an intensified national war on cancer.

The plan itself is long overdue, and sources say it is undergoing revision by the White House's office of management and budget.

Louis Carrese, who developed the plan for the National Cancer Institute from the recommendations of 250 scientists, said "a lot of changes" were made as a result of the Institute of Medicine review.

Carrese, a systems analyst who is trying to use that process to direct biomedical research, acknowledged that some members of the committee "will think we didn't make engough changes."

He denied that the plan aims to control all cancer research from Washington and said that "quite a few word changes — jargon changes — that were worrying the committee" should erase that impression.

Although the institute of medicine report says that some of the plan's "defects" can be corrected with language changes, it points to a more substantive problem in the way science should be managed.

"The national cancer program plan," the committee says, "pushes the balance too far in the direction of centralized scientific planning and imposes too great a risk of bureaucratic rigidity."

"Much is said about the lines of research that appear most promising today — virology, cellular immunology and genetics, for example — but too little acknowledgement is made of the genuine possibility that any or all of today's leads . . . could turn out to be the wrong leads."

Many of the new leads for curing cancer, the institue of medicine committee feels, will come from scientists not in the cancer field — indeed from scientists "who may not even recognize that their research preoccupations are releveant to the cancer problem.

"Such scientists may fail to obtain support under the new cancer initiative simply because their research applications will never reach the NCI through the present national institutes of health system."

This point is especially important now since President Nixon has cut the budgets of all the institutes at NIH with the exception of his two favored health projects — cancer and heart.

The National Institute for General Medical Science, the committee report points out, deals with basic research that could have important implications for cancer. This institute "is chronically underfunded.

"What is needed," the committee says, "is some better sensing mechanism within NIH for the recognition of the basic science projects which are essential for the ultimate success of the cancer program."

The committee says that research involving the replication of genetic material, the behavior of cells and the way their membranes are assembled, the synthesis of proteins and cellular immunity should all be supported with cancer funds.

GALLUP POLL

Majority Back Minority Gov't

Voters have returned a number of minority governments during recent years. Consensus, by a ratio of two to one, is that such a situation is good for the nation (54%) rather than bad (27%).

This degree of approval is even higher in certain segments of the population. For instance, among NDP voters, approval is five times as high as disapproval. Among those who favor the Liberal party, it is more than twice as high, but the choice narrows among Conservatives.

It is among Canadians other than English or French-speaking, where favor for a minority government is highest (64%), as compared to French-Canadians where less than a majority think it is a good thing (48%).

Again there is a sharp contrast of opinion among those with university educations, where 61% endorse a minority government, as compared to only 47% among those with public school training only.

On this issue, rich and poor think very much alike, with only small variations in the levels of opinion among all income brackets.

The study was carried out in the first week of March, with a national random sample of 713 adults in personal, at-home interviews. A sample of this size is accurate within a 4 percentage point margin of error, 19 out of 20 times.

The question:

"Canada has had a number of minority governments in Ottawa during the past 10 years or so — that is a parliament in which the party in power has no clear-cut majority over all other parties. On the whole, in your opinion, do you think that a minority government is good or bad for the nation?"

The table below compares the national viewpoint with those among adherents of the main political parties, mother tongue and educational segments.

Engineers Seek Work

TORONTO (CP) — The Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario says a survey it took in nine provinces indicates an increase in the number of graduate engineers who are unemployed or employed in non-engineering work.

The survey listed at least 268 graduate engineers out of work and 211 others in jobs not connected with engineering as of Dec. 1, 1972.

One year earlier, a similar survey found 202 engineers unemployed and 168 employed in work "which is not satisfactory on a full-time continuing basis."

Red Space Station Salyut Damaged in Mystery Mishap

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Salyut space station the Soviet Union put into earth orbit April 3 was apparently badly damaged by an unexplained accident in space 11 days ago.

The accident was so bad that the four solar panels that supply Salyut with electricity were torn loose, cutting off power to the station and making it impossible for cosmonauts to board it for any length of time in space.

The accident explains why the Russians did not follow the Salyut launch with a manned Soyuz launch, something that was generally expected. It also explains why the Russians announced last week that Salyut was never meant to be anything more than an unmanned test of the space station.

The accident raises some serious doubts about the Soviet manned space program, which has suffered four mishaps in the past two years. It also raises questions about the proposed American-Soviet docking mission, which is scheduled to link up Soyuz and an Apollo spacecraft for four days in the summer of 1975.

"At the least, it means a delay of Soviet manned flight plans as they re-examine their whole program," one American space observer said. "They must pinpoint the cause of their troubles and set about repairing the damage."

The cosmonauts of Soyuz 10 were unable to enter the first Salyut because of a hatch failure. The men of Soyuz 11 got into Salyut without trouble, but were killed on their return to earth at the end of a 24-day stay inside Salyut.

A second Salyut was launched last July, but never reached earth orbit because of engine failure in the rocket booster's second stage.

CATASTROPHIC

Just what went wrong this time is not precisely known, but the accident was described by one source as a "catastrophic event."

The mishap took place April 14, just 11 days after Salyut was launched. One source said the accident shook loose the Salyut's solar panels and started the space station tumbling end-over-end like a gigantic pinwheel.

This was the same day that the North American Air Defence Command said it detected three separate pieces of equipment flying in orbit along with the space station. NORAD said that at least one of the pieces had shaken loose from the Salyut. NORAD said it cold not say anything about the size, shape or motion of the extra pieces in orbit.

Any of a number of incidents could have ripped parts off Salyut, at the same time sending the space station tumbling out of control.

Its cabin could have sprung a bad leak, acting like a sudden release of air from a baloon. A small thruster engine could have fired out of control and kept firing in a way that would rotate the space station faster and faster.

TANK EXPLOSION

Finally, a pressurized tank of gas might have exploded aboard the spacecraft, sending the station into a tumbling motion that could not be reversed from the ground.

Russia might still launch a manned Soyuz spacecraft in the next month or so, if only to have it rendezvous with the damaged Salyut to inspect the damage. One source said that the accident that knocked Salyut's solar panels loose also ended radio contact with the station, which means that Soviet scientists might not have any information about the cause of the accident.

FIREMEN chop through the roof to get at the blaze Tuesday at 667-669 Pine which caused about $4,000 damage mainly to the upper suite rented by Terry Bulmer and Donna Plume. Occupants were away when the fire started in a rear bedroom about 4 p.m. and the cause of the fire is still under investigation.

MAFIA IS FREE, UNIONS IN PRISON—TEACHERS

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec Teachers Corp. has been placing advertisements in French-language newspapers using Easter religious themes as analogies to the plight of its imprisoned union leader, Yvon Charbonneau.

The ads appeared the Saturday before Easter Sunday in newspapers in Montreal, Quebec City, Ottawa, Sherbrooke and Trois-Rivieres.

The ads are headed by a slogan "They Chose Barabbas" and show five vertical religious drawings ranging from Pontius Pilate presenting Barabbas and Jesus Christ to the population to crucifixion scenes.

One of the drawings says "the Mafia is free, the unions are in prison."

Besides the religious sequences are vertical photographs of Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer, Justice Minister Jerome Choquette, Premier Robert Bourassa, Mr. Charbonneau, behind bars and Mr. Charbonneau's family gathered outside of the Orsainville, Que. prison where he is being held.

The Teachers Corp. placed ads Monday showing a portrait of Christ's resurrection under which was a photo of broken jail bars and a slogan "They Will Get Out".

Louis-Martin Tard, a freelance writer, said in an editorial comment Tuesday on the front page of Le Devoir that the ads were in bad taste.

A teachers corporation official had no comment Tuesday night.

Mr. Charbonneau, Marcel Pepin, president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, and Louis Laberge, president of the Quebec Federation of Labor, entered the prison near Quebec City in February to serve one-year sentences for contempt of court arising from public service strikes a year ago.

AIRPORT RE-OPENED

ST. GEORGES, Grenada (Reuter) — Pearls airport was reopened under heavy police guard Tuesday after being closed for two days by demonstrators protesting a police killing.

Police Commissioner Mergyn Barrow said about 40 extra police were posted at the airport to ensure that incidents such as the littering of the runway with obtacles on Sunday were not repeated.

About 500 demonstrators forced the closure of the airport Sunday when they strewed bottles, stones, oil drums and other objects on the runway.

Viruses and Cancer Linked by Sabin

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr. Albert Sabin, developer of the live-virus polio vaccine, reported Tuesday evidence that two common and widespread viruses play an important role in causing some types of cancer in "certain individuals under special conditions."

In a report co-written with an Italian scientist, Sabin said the viruses are two types of the "herpes simplex" microbes which ordinarily cause cold sores or sores of the genital organs.

He indicated the viruses were incriminated in cancer by strange genetic "footprints" they left after playing a hit-and-run role.

Reporting to the National Academy of Sciences, Sabin said recent studies involving human cancer patients warrant the conclusion that one or the other microbes is implicated in at least nine human cancers and not in 20 others.

Up to now at least, no virus of any kind has been definitely linked to any form of human cancer.

The research, featuring blood tests of cancer patients, was conducted at the National Cancer Institutes' new research centre in Fort Detrick, Md.

Sabin, a guest researcher at the centre for several months and Dr. Giulio Tarro of the University of Naples, said there was evidence of herpesvirus implication in the blood of 56 patients with the following cancers:

Lip, mouth, nose and throat, kidney, bladder, prostate, uterine cervix and vulva.

But negative results were found in 81 other patients afflicted with 20 other types of cancer, including such major sites as lung, stomach, colon, breast, liver, ovary and two types of acute leukemia.

Negative results were also found in 51 persons without cancer.

Sabin, who reported last December that preliminary indications from his and Tarro's work were "too good to be true," said his new report:

"These findings . . . open new fields for study of human cancer. There is a need first of all for expanding these observations on larger numbers of human cancers — especially in relation to the clinical stage of the cancer."

He declared the viruses were incriminated in the positive cases by evidence, in blood samples, of the presence of so-called "non-virion antigens" — that is, a kind of genetic "footprint" of viruses which, in certain individual cases, had started a malignancy and then disappeared.

Acupuncture Operations Convert Canadian MDs

By JOHN BURNS
Special to The Times

PEKING — A 50-year-old office worker raised his arm from the operating table, waved and said Jia-na-da (Canada) yesterday, making believers of a group of Canadian doctors who had just watched him lying fully conscious as Chinese surgeons using acupunctural anaesthesia removed a tumor from his brain.

The doctors, members of a mission drawn together by the Canadian Medical Association, came to China skeptical of some of the extraordinary claims that have been made for the 3,000-year-old needling technique, but they will return home enthusiastic about its potential for Canadian medicine.

"I'm elated, there's no other word for it," said Dr. Gustave Gingras, president of the CMA, after watching two brain tumor excisions in adjoining operating theatres at Peking's Hsuan Wu Hospital, which specializes in neurosurgery.

Most of the doctors on the 16-member mission placed acupuncture first among the various aspects of Chinese medicine they were anxious to explore when they arrived here last week, and their hosts did not disappoint them. While one group watched the brain operations yesterday, another visited a maternity hospital to watch a woman give birth by caesarian section under acupunctural anaesthesia.

It works, no doubt about it, said Dr. Irwin Hilliard, physician-in-chief of the Toronto Western Hospital, as he stood on a stool and watched the surgeons as they drilled through the skull of a 47-year-old housewife and removed a walnut-sized tumor from her brain.

Unlike the general anaesthetics in use in the west, acupuncture has no depressant effects on a patient's breathing or heartbeat, does not induce nausea and allows a surgeon to communicate with his patient throughout the operation. Doctors consider these major advantages, especially for patients who are considered to be poor anaesthetic risks.

After the operations the Canadians urged one of the top men in the Chinese ministry of public health, Hsieh Hua, who accompanied the mission on the visit, to lend his support to a medical exchange scheme which would allow Canadian anaesthetists to study acupuncture in China.

The Canadians said that such exchanges would be a useful first step towards a program of research into acupuncture in Canada, which they regard as essential before any move is made to sanction the technique for use in Canadian surgical procedures.

Hsieh said the training of Canadian anaesthetists would be considered, but subsequent discussions with Chinese surgeons indicated that the Chinese would insist on the Canadians learning Chinese first, then enrolling in a full three-year course of traditional Chinese medicine. The Canadian doctors said they thought this would be impractical.

Whatever the future of acupunctural anaesthesia in Canada, the Canadians are not likely to forget their first sight of the technique in use, which came when they stepped into the operating theatre where Yao Kuo-chun, the office worker, lay awaiting the removal of his tumor.

Yao, a slightly built man, lost all the vision in one eye and almost all in the other during the past six months as a result of a tumor pressing in his optic nerve. Doctors hope he will recover at least some vision in both eyes in coming months.

Apart from two small doses of a pain-killing drug called fentanyl, the surgical team relied entirely on acupuncture to induce the necessary anaesthetic effect during the 90-minute operation. Needles for the acupuncture were placed in his left ankle and at the four corners of the incision area on his forehead, and were agitated by means of electric current.

Hao, hao, hao, okay he said, when the anaesthetist asked him how he felt as the surgeons sawed through his skull. Later he complained of feeling hot as the surgeons cut through the fibrous hood over his brain, causing the anaesthetist to add another needle to his left wrist and inject the second dose of fentanyl, but there was never any sign that he was in pain.

When the operation was completed, nurses removed the drapes surrounding the patient, allowing light from the windows to reach him. He told them he could see the daylight, thanked the surgeon and raised his arm to wave goodbye to the departing Canadians.

Wu Shu-ching, the housewife, was less animated during her operation, possibly because her tumor was bigger and deeper, causing her to suffer epileptic fits and partial paralysis in recent months. But with needles inserted in her ankles, knees and ears, she showed no sign of pain.

Doctors told the Canadians that the hospital has performed 590 operations with acupuncture in the past three years, achieving a 90-per-cent success rate. They said the technique can be used for all patients except children under 15 and for all neurosurgical procedures except those involving psychological and neuropathological disorders.

Beef Imports Checked

Special to The Times

OTTAWA — The federal health department is monitoring U.S. beef and other imported meats to spot any meats tainted with the controversial growth promotant diethylstilbestrol (DES).

Meanwhile, Ottawa sources predict that the United States within a matter of weeks will follow the Canadian example and ban the use of DES growth-promoting implant pellets in beef and other livestock..

DES, which has been linked with cancer in animals and humans, was suspended from use in Canada both as a feed additive and as a pellet implant for beef and other livestock. The suspension — in effect a ban — started Jan. 1. All domestic beef raised with the aid of DES before Jan. 1 is expected to be slaughtered by the end of this month.

The U.S. to date has only banned use of DES as a feed additive. It still allows use of DES as a pellet implant.

The DES monitoring program will concentrate on testing beef liver and kidney samples, where the minute amounts of DES are most likely to be detected.

In humans, DES has been linked directly with a rare form of vaginal cancer, which has been recorded as developing in the female offspring of mothers treated with high doses of DES to prevent termination of their pregnancy.

High-Kickers and Gun-Slingers Find Lots of Work in Florida

OCALA, Fla. (UPI) — A man can still hire out as a gunfighter in Florida, if he's fast enough on the draw.

And — despite the topless go-go craze — there is still a demand for cloth-bundled girl dancers, provided they can kick high enough.

Ask Bob Chambers, who drove a Greyhound bus for 20 years, worked for a while as a special state investigator and then strapped on a sixgun.

Chambers, who at 59 bears a striking resemblance to actor Richard Boone, today is "top gun" at a Florida tourist attraction.

How does a bus driver turn gunslinger?

"I had to get a special rig (holster) made to outdraw them," says Chambers, who now trains the other gunfighters at six-gun territory.

"I use a low-slung, Paladin-type rig."

He also recruits young men, mostly from the local area, to stage hourly gunfights in the streets of a make-believe frontier town.

"There's a certain fascination to it," said Chambers.

"We try to get boys with athletic experience so we can teach them to fall from a roof without hurting themselves. We teach them the spin fall and even try to teach them the difference in going down by a blast from a .45-calibre revolver or a sawed-off shotgun."

On a recent rainly day, the importance of that kind of training was clearly demonstrated when the town marshal shot Don Hegsmith up on the roof of the general store.

The script called for Hegsmith to fall down into the street. He did, but he sprained an ankle in the process.

"It's a lot of fun," said Chambers. "All of us have a little kid in us."

The kids might like the gunplay, all right, but in the "Palace Saloon" Molly Parks has something going for their dads.

Molly, a petite redhead who teams with her mother, Vickie, is helping keep alive the art of can-can dancing. Like Chambers, she recruits mostly local talent and teaches them herself.

"The can-can is not hard, as compared to some modern jazz dances, but it very strenuous," said Molly, who has been dancing with her British-born mother in many forms of show business since she was four months old.

Molly sees family-style outdoor attractions, which are multiplying all over Florida and elsewhere, as a new hope for entertainers.

She and her mother are putting together seven different shows, with 35 to 40 dancers, for appearances at similar western attractions in several states.

BESEIGED BY BABOONS

WINDSOR, England (CP) — During a visit to the Windsor Safari Park in Berkshire, Labor MP Neil Kinnock was besieged by a herd of baboons. As he sat helpless inside his car, the hungry animals devoured the windshield wipers, sidelights and rear registration plate. Kinnock plans to raise in Parliament the matter of compensation for zoo visitors in similar circumstances.

RAW VEGETABLES LINKED TO DEATHS

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bacteria on uncooked vegetables may be linked to the high rate of often fatal infections among severely burned or acutely ill persons, says a local researcher.

Dr. Spyros Kominos, chief of microbiology at Mercy Hospital, says tests show vegetables like celery, tomatoes and cucumbers are laden with bacteria known as pseudomonas aeruginosa.

Though harmless to the general public, it normally infects 60 to 70 per cent of patients suffering from severe burns, leukemia and other critical maladies, he said.

The infection has been "completely eliminated" among such patients at Mercy Hospital since they stopped receiving raw vegetables in salads more than a year ago he said.

Esquimalt Council to Control Size of Library Budget Slash

The Greater Public Library is threatened with a $51,000 slash in its 1973 budget unless Esquimalt council reverses its decision not to pay more than 15 per cent more than in 1972.

Prospects of Esquimalt reversing its decision look gloomy.

The library board voted Tuesday to ask Esquimalt to reconsider its decision after library director Donald Miller explained what the cutback would mean.

The board had originally set its budget at $1,135,772, an increase of 21 per cent over the 1972 one.

The participating municipalities — Victoria, Oak Bay, Saanich, Esquimalt and Central Saanich must approve the library budget. The original figure was approved by Oak Bay, Saanich and Central Saanich but Victoria drew the line at an 18.7 per cent increase.

All the municipalities must pay their share of the lowest approved budget. If Victoria's 18.7 per cent increase stands, Miller said, the original budget would be pared by 20,000, not $51,000.

Library board chairman, Art Mebs, an Esquimalt alderman, said the situation places him in "a rather embarrasing and untenable position."

He and the rest of the board agreed that Esquimalt's decision will have a "drastic impact."

Esquimalt council meets tonight to discuss the municipal budget and the library allocation will probably be included on the agenda.

Mayor Art Young, who voted against the 15 per cent ceiling, said:

"We've already considered it once so I don't think we're going to change our minds."

He described the funding formula as "old-fashioned," explaining "eight per cent of library users can dictate to the other 92 per cent."

Ald. Ken Hill said that the 15 per cent increase is "more than adequate."

In other business, the board agreed to endorse in principle a Canadian National Institute for the Blind project to set up "talking book cassette" sections in public libraries.

JUDGE WON'T ALLOW CHARGES DROPPED

NANAIMO (CP) — Provincial court Judge Stanley Wardill of Nanaimo Tuesday ordered two Gabriola Island men to stand trial on charges of wilful damage and common assault.

Complainant Paul Karpenko, also of Gabriola, asked last week that the charges be dropped against George Guy Mathieson, 20, and Sidney Allan Skinner, 27. Karpenko said restitution for his damaged car had been made.

Judge Wardill said at that time that the courts were not to be used as collection agencies, and he ordered the three to appear Tuesday for assessment of court costs. But instead, he decided to allow the charges to proceed.

The two accused were remanded to next Monday.

They'll Drink to That

A young Prince George beer-drinker and his wife are about to see an end to their identification problems, according to a spokesman for the Liquor Control Board here.

Vern Hupp, 22, and his wife, Shirley, 19, have had problems getting served in Prince George beer parlors because the hotels have demanded they show LCB identity cards with their photographs on them.

But they were told when they went to get their cards they are no longer being issued by the LCB. A new system of cards is being phased in June 1.

In the meantime, the Hupps, and any number of other B.C. residents, would have had to do without their beer-drinking privileges until the new cards arrived.

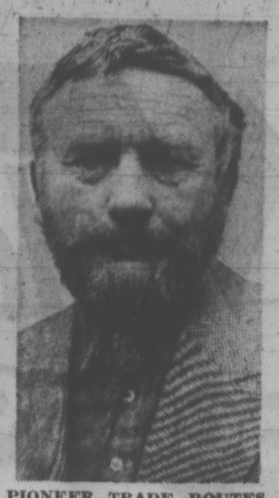
But LCB secretary Gerry Devine now says the old card will be continued until the end of May. Certain branches of the Bank of Nova Scotia will make photographic facilities available and the identity cards will be processed as usual.

Devine said he had discussed the matter with the bank's head office, which had meant to bring an end to the bank's involvement in the scheme.

Under the new system, effective June 1, persons will go to their local office of the Motor Vehicle Branch to have their photographs taken. The fee for the identity cards is $2.

Train-Truck Crash

SURREY (CP) — Two passenger coaches of a Burlington Northern train bound for Seattle were derailed this morning when the train collided with a lumber truck. There were no injuries to the passengers or train crew. The truck driver was treated and released from hospital.



PIONEER TRADE ROUTES used by fur traders in the days when canoes were the main means of transportation will be the subject of an illustrated talk by Hugh MacMillan, Archivist for the province of Ontario. He will speak Saturday at 8 p.m. at the Provincial Museum's Newcombe Auditorium.

Flowers of Hope Campaign Set For Duncan Area

DUNCAN — The Flowers of Hope campaign, an annual fund-raising campaign for the area's mentally retarded, will be held May 13-19.

Campaign convener is Irene Hall.

Residents of the area will receive a packet of giant marigold seeds for which they may make a contribution to the Duncan and District Association for the Mentally Retarded.

There will be no door-to-door canvass. Donations may be sent to Box 204 Duncan.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 20-year-old Victoria man who asked to be remanded in custody because he "was afraid of his addiction to drugs" was fined $400 and placed on 18 months probation in provincial court Tuesday.

Cameron Roy Imlach, 1681 Pear, pleaded guilty to two counts of breaking and entering with intent to steal.

He admitted breaking into the Commons Building at University of Victoria and the Students' Union Building March 31 with a companion. In both cases, he was frightened off while attempting to steal money from a stamp machine and condom dispenser.

Judge William Ostler said Imlach's request to be kept in custody was "really remarkable" and showed a "real desire" for a better life.

A 23-year-old man facing a robbery-with-violence charge was remanded in custody until Thursday at the request of the prosecutor.

Joseph Rolland Claude Carriere, 1325 Esquimalt, is charged in connection with a Monday incident in which $4 was stolen from an elderly man.

The victim, court was told, suffered no serious injury.

The 48-hour adjournment will be used to check into Carriere's background.

A 21-year-old man who told provincial court he was trying to sell an unregistered sawed-off .22 calibre rifle which he carried in a brown paper bag, was fined $75.

Donald Grier MacDonald, 1731 Cook, pleaded guilty to the charge of possession of an unregistered weapon.

MacDonald was questioned by Police Monday while carrying the gun in a Government Street store.

A preliminary hearing on a charge of criminal negligence causing death against Larry Howard Caton, 28, of 15 Midwood, has been set for June 25.

Caton was charged Tuesday after a March 2 car crash in Saanich in which Gordon Baker, 51, of 3041 Albany, died.

A rowdy bus passenger who was delivered Sunday night — in the bus — to the city police station was fined $25 after he admitted causing a disturbance by being drunk.

Prosecutor John Macintyre said Odilon Vallee, 52, of 138 Dallas, was yelling on the bus and refused to obey the operator's request that he get off. He said Vallee's conduct upset the dozen or so other passengers aboard.

Choppers Collide, 8 Soldiers Die

FT. HOOD, Tex. (UPI) — Two army helicopters caught in a blinding rainstorm collided in flight and crashed Tuesday during exhibition manoeuvers for visiting Pentagon officials. Eight soldiers were killed.

Five other men aboard the two choppers were injured, including two who were critically hurt.

Tempers Short As Uruguay Revolt Spreads

By JULIO VILLAVERDE

MONTEVIDEO (Reuter) — Tempers are short in Uruguay as ripples started by a military revolt in February spread through the nation's political and business life.

The armed forces, politicians and organized labor are jostling for power, with increasing evidence that the military mean to come out on top.

Their bloodless uprising shook right-wing President Juan Maria Bordaberry and left him virtually friendless, but stopped short of formally ousting him.

Recent military criticism of politicians accused of "obstructing" reforms indicates that unless there is a drastic change of attitude soon, some senior officers will end Uruguay's traditional military aloofness from politics and take over, observers say.

Allegations of corruption in public life, which have led to prosecutions of several important public figures, prompted February's "coup in disguise" as some politicians called the revolt.

For two days tanks, armed sailors and barricades obstructed the streets of this normally tranquil seaside capital, although no shots were fired.

TRY TO CAPITALIZE

Since then all sides have tried to take advantage of an unprecedentedly fluid situation.

Left-wing labor unions have staged strikes to try to force the president out of office. Politicians of all stripes blame rivals for the country's near-disastrous economic situation and for providing opening for the military.

The military wait, with growing impatience. Bordaberry tries to reconcile the forces, with an ever-growing danger of losing his precarious congressional majority.

Ironically it was Bordaberry himself who first brought the military into a neo-political role when he unleashed them against the left-wing Tupamaros or urban guerrillas shortly after taking office a year ago.

The Tupamaros had been carrying out political kidnappings, robberies, "executions" of alleged police torturers and propaganda raids, almost with impunity, for several years.

Having crushed the Tupamaros, the military became more and more vociferous in their criticism of the government, culminating in their refusal to accept a defence minister who set out to purge obstreperous officers.

PRESS ADVANTAGE

Having obtained the minister's resignation, the military went further in dictating a reform program to the government, demanding, and getting, establishment of a military-dominated national security council" and appointment of an army officer as interior minister.

Even more ironically for the ruling Colorado party, some of the measures proposed by the military, such as agrarian reform, emergency help for the poor and workers' participation in managing industry, would not be frowned upon by the Tupamaros.

The commanders-in-chief of the three armed forces, in a statement read recently over the national radio and television, "talked tough" in a manner similar to the initial stages of coups by officers in other Latin-American countries.

They spoke of "manoeuvres by certain privileged sectors who do not wish to change a situation which has given them power and personal benefits for a long time."

The warning was clear that the tanks which rolled into the streets in February can move again at a moment's notice.

Vive Les Flea Bags!

PARIS (AP) — The French government has decided there's long-term virtue in the flea bag hotels of Paris.

After five years of offering special financial inducements to builders of 1,000-room plastic palaces, the state hotel credit agency is cutting off incentives to the delupe hostelries and for the first time offering subsidies to anyone who will put up the kind of hotel a $5-a-day tourist can afford.

The long Easter weekend showed what brought the change.

The Ritz and the George V had plenty of space, but about 5,000 of the city's 300,000 visitors slept in cars or public buildings, or at inns as far as 75 miles from Paris.

The little hotels, the friendly flea bags that traditionally handled most of the budget tourist trade, are dying at the rate of about 20 a year.

Their owners, who need 80 per cent occupancy year-round to make money, often find it easier to sell out to real estate developers who turn the buildings into offices or apartments.

"So what?" a government tourist office official said at this time last year.

"You just can't hold back progress. Why, a lot of those little hotels were sordid little places really."

But the government hotel policy came under attack.

The big new hotels were described as charmless and without anything specifically Parisian.

Under the new government decree, a rebate of $900 will be offered for every new hotel room built in the lowest price category, which until this month got no rebate at all.

Guards Go Back

HEADINGLEY, Man. (CP) — Guards returned to work as usual this morning at the provincial jail here, ending a 24-hour period when about half the guards booked off sick. They were protesting the hiring of an ex-prisoner for summer rehabilitation work.

Bible Reading End Urged

Victoria Times
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1973 41
FOURTH SECTION

A proposal to end compulsory religious exercises in public schools won full support from Greater Victoria school board Tuesday night.

A resolution calling for the move will be proposed by Vancouver school board at next month's convention of the B.C. School Trustees' Association.

"The sooner we get rid of the charade of Bible reading and the Lord's Prayer the better we'll be," Trustee Walter Donald, a worker priest in the Anglican church, told the board.

★ ★ ★

These exercises are meaningless and boring for students, he said.

The Vancouver resolution suggests that "provision be made in the curriculum for study of the world's religions."

Donald, with the board's approval, will suggest at the convention that this suggestion be dropped from the resolution.

"Are they really interested in Shintoism in Grade 1?" he asked.

The board spent most of its meeting discussing the 49 resolutions that will be presented at the trustees' association meeting.

The resolution on religious exercises was proposed by Vancouver in 1969 and defeated.

"It might pass this year," said Trustee Harold Knight.

The B.C. Teachers' Federation has sought since 1964 for discontinuance of religious exercises in schools.

A resolution asking the education minister to encourage teachers to report all cases of suspected child battering to the appropriate authority was questioned by board members as to its practicality.

"I wouldn't support it myself, mainly because it's impossible to implement," Trustee Philip Ney, a child psychiatrist, said.

"It's hard enough to get the medical profession to do it (report child-battering)," he said.

"We tend to focus on these kids that have the obvious bruises," Ney said, but often the "psychologically battered" children are as much in need of help.

A. J. Longmore, district superintendent of schools, supported the resolution.

"I would like to see us push these (social) agencies into protecting these youngsters," Longmore said. He said teachers "are really searching for someone to report to, some channel of communication."

Trustee Lavnia Greenwood said it was "a bit naive" to think that school personnel wouldn't be putting themselves in legal jeopardy by reporting such cases.

★ ★ ★

The board also:

—Rejected a resolution to approve corporal punishment in public schools.

"The next thing would be subsidies for vocational classes to produce stocks, gallows and racks," said Donald. "It's a stupid resolution."

—Supported a resolution asking the education minister to permit school boards to include in their budgets money to finance summer scrool programs.

Right now we have "summer school for the rich," director of instruction Dr. John Wiens said, because students must pay for summer school.

Trustee William Ross expressed concern that some students might slack off during the year knowing they could go to summer school and "enjoy that privilege at public expense."

However, Trustee Ney thought summer school would never be very popular.

—Supported a resolution asking for destruction of student records after they have graduated and have reached majority age, except for a transcript of final marks or some record of courses completed, and dates of attendance.

—Rejected a resolution that trustees' annual indemnities be reduced five per cent for every board meeting missed.

Reserved judgment on a proposal to ask the provincial government to set an early November election date for municipal councils and school boards.

ENERGY COMMISSION TO BE NAMED

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said Tuesday he expects the new seven-member B.C. Energy Commission will be named within about three weeks.

Macdonald was the minister responsible for guiding the legislation through the house. He said he has spoken to a number of prospective members of the commission already.

The commission will be responsible for regulating the prices of petroleum and gasoline prices through the province. The government has also said the commission will be used as a vehicle to make provincial representations to the federal government on resource exports.

Flat-Footed Pensioner at 16

LEEDS, England — Soldier Andrew Cosgrove became Britain's youngest army pensioner after doctors at his Yorkshire camp discovered that marching gave him flat feet. Andrew, 16, was awarded $1,000 disability pension. "It was a great disappointment," he said. "I've always wanted to be a soldier and fight in Northern Ireland."

DARTFORD, England — Leslie Mills, manager of the Dartford tunnel running under the Thames River between Kent and Essex counties, is puzzled because 4,878,092 cars left Kent through the tunnel last year but only 4,761,321 came the other way.

"Theoretically," he said, "if a driver goes through the tunnel, he will probably return. The bias toward northbound traffic is inexplicable."

NAPLES, Italy — Several of the world's most celebrated tenors sang Tuesday night in homage to Enrico Caruso in a performance here commemorating the centenary of the great Neapolitan tenor's birth. He died here in 1921. Singers honoring him included Vladimir Atlantov, of the Moscow Bolshoi company, Italians Mario del Monaco, Luciano Pavarotti and Ferruccio Tagliavini and Alain Vanzo of France.

OTTAWA — Industry Trade and Commerce Minister Alastair Gillespie will visit London and Brussels for trade talks during the first week in May. He is scheduled to arrive in London May 1. He will return to Ottawa May 5. In London he will be returning the visit British Trade Minister Peter Walker made to Ottawa last January after a trip to Washington.

ALREWAS, England — The Alrewas village council is planning to station life-size cardboard policemen on the main street to discourage speeders. "We would change the coups around a bit and occasionally put a real policeman among the fakes," councilman Reginald Stubbs said Tuesday. "The speeding motorist could never be sure."

SEATTLE — Robert Hill, a 17-year-old afflicted with a rare form of leukemia, will return to his Byfield, Mass., home this week, apparently cured by unusual treatment at University Hospital.

"One thing I've got to make clear," Hill said Tuesday, "is that I'm cured now but it could come back in time. I try not to think about that too much."

Hill was afflicted with leukemia of the bone marrow.

Treatment included a marrow transplant from his identical twin brother Richard, massive doses of X-rays, drugs, and a "tumor cell vaccine," said Dr. Alexander Fefer, a member of the team that treated Hill.

DORNOCH, Ont. — A 4-year-old boy missing since early Monday, was found late Tuesday and a police spokesman said his only injuries were a few cuts and bruises.

Robert Teddy Johnson of the Toronto suburb of Mississauga disappeared in a swampy area near this community about 20 miles south of Owen Sound. More than 40 police and 200 volunteers had joined in the search for the boy, who was reported missing after he and his dog left for a walk from his parents' cottage. The dog later returned home.

MONTREAL — There no longer is a typical dope smoker, and marijuana and hashish users are as likely to be middle-aged professionals as not, a member of the Le Dain commission on the non-medical use of drugs said Tuesday. Professor Ian Campbell told a Montreal service club the commission expects to make public its final report within a few weeks.

MLA'S LANGUAGE FOUL

WINNIPEG (CP) — A government backbencher was threatened with expulsion from the Manitoba legislature Tuesday night for using strong language.

Tom Barrow (NDP-Flin Flon) was required to withdraw and apologize three times during his 30-minute speech. Finally he was ordered by committee chairman William Jenkins (NDP-Logan) to discontinue his speech and sit down.

Barrow, during debate on the labor department's estimates, first called James Bilton (PC-Swan River) a "windbag."

After withdrawing the remark and being heckled from the opposition benches, he shouted across the floor at Bilton:

"Say something, you fat-faced bastard."

At this stage some opposition members called for the Flin Flon member to be ejected from the chamber. Joe Borowski (Ind.-Thompson) said he had gone "beyond the bounds of all decency."

LOOKS LIKE A CASE FOR KEYSTONE COPS

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The candidate who tried out for a role as an x-rated robber at a credit union for actors didn't get the part — or any money — but his exit showed a talent for slapstick.

Shortly after noon, a man with a pistol entered the offices of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists Credit Union and told two customers and five employees to take off their clothes because "I'm going to rob you."

As the seven began stripping, the bandit opened a hall door and leaned out, to check if passerbys could see what was going on.

One of the women customers gave him a push and when he stumbled through the door, she locked it behind him.

The bandit looked puzzled and then exited, stage right.

Trail Cuts Firefighters

TRAIL (CP) — The number of firemen here will be cut to 12 from 16 starting June 1 as an economy measure. Fire Chief Warren Banks says the use of volunteer firmen and a 24-hour answering service will ensure the department's efficiency. However, Fred Neagle, president of Local 941 of the International Association of Fire Fighters, says the cuts are false economy.

The Buffalo Roam...Far Away and Gone

WHITEHORSE, Y.T. (CP) — The Yukon territorial game branch is searching for the unknown home where the buffalo roam because its entire herd has been missing for two years.

In any other area, losing a whole herd of bison might be a difficult accomplishment. But the Yukon consists of 207,000 square miles of largely uninhabited mountain wilderness, river valleys and tundra.

And somewhere out there, in the Nisling River country near Aish'hik Lake west of this territorial capital, there may be a herd of the large beasts meandering about, munching up the mountain meadow greenery by the ton.

"We don't know where they are, or even if they are," said game director J. B. Fitzgerald. "We think there must be some left out there somewhere, but we don't know how many and nobody has seen the herd for two summers."

Fitzgerald said his branch hopes to launch a comprehensive wildlife survey in the Yukon this spring, summer and fall, and one of the primary objectives will be to locate the lost buffalo.

ARRIVED IN 1951

The Yukon got into the buffalo business in September, 1951, when six of the animals arrived in the territory, compliments of the state of Alaska, the Canadian Wildlife Service and the Fish and Game Association.

They were hauled by truck from the Big Delta area of Alaska, where a substantial herd still roams the wilderness. This herd, in turn, is believed descended from those that roamed the Canadian West and now inhabit the northern reaches of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Although the buffalo is indigenous to the plains areas of the North American continent, wildlife biologists have discovered that the animal readily adapts to northern wilderness, despite the long winters and heavy snowfall.

The Yukon's one and only buffalo herd was released at the Braeburn experimental station after a 72-hour trip — and they lit out for the hills immediately.

"It was a fine sight to see these bison gallop through the gates to freedom in their new environment," wrote one Yukon government official who witnessed the spectacle of hooves thundering into the sunset.

"I cannot help but believe they will survive in the new conditions as we have plenty of food and pastureland throughout the area in which we hope they will live and prosper."

HEADED FOR WILDS

The buffalo didn't stick around to find out. At that time the herd consisted of two bulls and four cows and their immediate objective seemed to be to put as much distance as possible between themselves and the trucks that brought them to Braeburn.

There have been intermittent sightings of the herd in the intervening years as the buffalo shuffled from one mountain pass to the next, leaving only a tell-tale trail of blackflies and buffalo chips.

In 1955 the herd consisted of a bull, three cows, a yearling, a calf and a young bull. By 1960 it had grown to eight or nine animals, and two summers ago — the last reported sighting — the herd numbered 11 animals.

In the Yukon, the buffalo have two natural enemies — drunks and wolves

"They never multiplied to any extent," said Fitzgerald. "The wolves appear to have downed many of the young calves."

HUNTERS FINED

The buffalo is a protected species in the Yukon, meaning that big game hunters who down one are subject to severe fines under territorial hunting ordinances.

But one of the original bulls was downed by a drunk near Haines Junction a few years ago.

"This particular bull had gotten a little tame and started hanging around our experimental station," said Fitzgerald.

"Well, one night a guy came out of a car and saw this buffalo standing on the road. He thought it was a grizzly bear — how you can mistake a buffalo for a bear I don't know.

"Anyway, he got his rifle and shot it. He got his day in court."

And the territorial game branch got the buffalo head. It's stuffed and mounted, adorning the wall of the Whitehorse office.

But nobody has got the herd. Fitzgerald swept his hand over a map of the Aishihik Lake area and muttered almost inaudibly: "Could be anywhere, anywhere out there."

If the game branch does manage to locate the herd, it's got a big treat in store for the remaining bulls. There are plans to add some fresh cows to the herd.

First of all, the branch has got to find it. That will probably be done by aerial reconnaisance — provided the skies are not cloudy all day.

BAD FOOD

LONDON (CP) — Overweight individuals should cook themselves thoroughly unappetizing meals as an antidote to their gluttony, says Prof. Stanley Schachter of Columbia University. Schachter told a medical convention that research shows overweight persons have "no sense of hunger." They eat whatever appeals to them, whenever they like. "The answer is a deliberate introduction of unappealing food into their diets," Schachter said.

Some Dos and Don'ts For the End of April

A hodge-podge of reminders for gardeners before the end of a remarkably dry April.

A reminder that hardy carnations and pinks outdoors may need a bit of cleaning up if they are to flower well in June. Cut off tall stems; the rosette or tuft of grey leaves at the base will produce flower stems this summer.

If you have wood ashes, use them around these plants, with a good watering, the ashes act as a tonic.

If you have soot from an oil-free chimney, you can use it in two ways. One, as fertilizer for onions, shallots, leeks and garlic; two, as a topsoil ingredient to warm the soil alongside vegetable seed rows.

This may sound queer, but dark soil absorbs sun warmth and retains it longer than a light colored soil. Thus, seeds germinate in less time in dark soil than in light.

Soot from an outdoor wood-burning fireplace should be saved for this purpose, or from a coal furnace if one still exists.

A reminder that watering may be necessary for shrubs growing near house or other walls, or concrete steps and patios.

★ ★ ★

There was one good rainfall during this month, but the dry soil soon absorbed it and is asking for more. The beautiful rhododendrons will only fulfill their bud potential during May and June if they have sufficient moisture at their roots, now.

A reminder about taking seed pods from the stems where daffodils have flowered. Only by so doing will the bulbs have a chance to build up top quality flowers within them for next spring's display.

While you remember it, put down some bulb fertilizer. Water it in: the bulbs probably need a good soaking to maintain their leaves in working condition for another month.

A reminder about sowing the useful herbs and salad vegetables you promised — in a sundeck or apartment planter, or in a convenient sunny plot near the house door.

A reminder that the last of the six-week series of talks on "Growing Good Food" is coming up tomorrow night (Thursday, April 26) from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at the YM-YW, 880 Courtney Street. Jack Dickman will discuss the storing, freezing and cooking of the vegetables and fruits produced during the growing season. Also when to harvest those hardy enough to be left growing in winter.

And finally, a reminder about the local Rock and Alpine Garden Society show in Memorial Hall behind Christ Church Cathedral. I told you of all its wonderful possibilities in an earlier column.

The show opens on Friday April 27 at 2 p.m., closing at 10 p.m., and reopening Saturday, April 28 at 9:30, remaining open all day until 9:30 p.m.

SOLUTIONS THURSDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

In today's deal, which came up in a recent rubber-bridge game, we have an example of top-notch declarer's play. Sitting South was one of our nation's top-ranking players, Michael Cappelletti, of Alexandria, Va. Both sides vulnerable. North deals.

SOUTH

◇ Q 5
♣ K 9 2

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♣.

On West's opening lead of the club five, East put up the ace. South made a good play when he falsecarded by dropping the nine-spot. As east viewed it, if South were making a normal play, then West's five couldn't be a singleton. since the deuce was not in evidence. So East assumed that West had started with the doubleton 5-2.

To trick two, East returned the jack of diamonds, which was covered by South's queen and West's king. The king of diamonds was permitted to win the trick. To trick three, West led a low diamond, dummy's ace winning.

The play was now routine. A trump was led and South's jack was taken by West's ace. Another diamond lead was then made, and ruffed by South. After picking up West's remaining trump, declarer claimed his contract.

If declarer had played the two of clubs on the opening lead, East, by observation, would have recognized that West could have no club lower than the five. And, hence, the five might be a singleton (although East might well have led the five from a tripleton K-9-5 combination). If East now returned a club, West would ruff. Actually, declarer would still make his contract, for if West next led a low diamond, declarer would let it ride around to his queen. And if West made any other lead, in time declarer would discard his losing diamond on dummy's club queen.

Be that as it may, the key play came when, at trick two, declarer did not take West's king of diamonds with dummy's ace. Had he taken it, he would then have led a trump to West's ace. West would now have returned a low diamond to East's ten. If east were gifted with clairvoyance, instead of then leading his remaining diamond, he would have returned a club. As is evident, West would have ruffed this lead, for the setting trick.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

We have 2499 for the game today. Two 9's, one 2, and one 4. Using all four each time, but no other digits at all, you form expressions for consecutive numbers from 1 up.

Any arithmetical signs may be used, but no summation of factorial symbols. Don't forget both types of decimals, powers and roots (no extra digits). For example 94−9+2 is a solution for 87.

The limit without a break in continuity seems to be 110. I shall be glad to check solutions, and will send hints to help in future games if requested.

Yesterday's answer: TRAP was 1537.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Honesty the Best Policy

Dr. Samuel Klagsbrun says that doctors should not lose contact with their cancer patients, and should never be non-communicative when a patient wishes to know what his condition is, and what chances he has of recovery.

Often, a patient is so worried that he tries to get this information from a technician who is drawing some blood, or is making an x-ray film—but these persons have orders about not giving information to patients.

Dr. Klagsbrun says that often a doctor behaves queerly with a severely and terminally ill patient, because he feels a sense of impotence, and perhaps guilt, because he cannot cure.

Fortunately, today in medical schools, young doctors are being taught how better to care for dying patients, so as not to make them feel isolated and cut off from everyone, or to give the impression that the doctor has given up on them.

I will never forget one evening when, going home unusually late from my office, I dropped in at the hospital to see how things were going with a patient of mine — a very fine and able schoolteacher who that morning had had a breast removed for cancer. I found her crying, I asked, "What went wrong?" And she said that her surgeon had just been to her room, but when she asked him if he found the cancer and got it all out, he just turned and walked out of the room.

When, the next day, I remonstrated with my surgeon friend, he said, "I am paid to do the operation, not to talk to the woman."

One thing that I think is very unwise is to tell a patient how long he is likely to live. Too often, the physician who does this makes a serious miscalculation which deeply offends the patient. It is impossible to say—even to a cancer patient—how long he or she is likely to survive, because different people have different degrees of resistance to cancer, and also, there are different grades of cancer and different types of cancer, some of which tend to kill quickly and others which allow the person to live for many years with little discomfort.

Winery Says Vintage Smell Comes From Up The Creek

Growers' Wine Co. agrees there is a bad smell about the place, but president Derek Haxell today said it comes from somewhere further upstream.

The smell was so bad Tuesday night it prompted Ald. William Noel to tell Saanich council public works committee the residents at the north end of Swan Lake should not have to put up with it.

A heavy mist over Swan Creek and the lake itself carried putrid vapors to the steps of the municipal hall.

Noel suspected the creek, which empties into the east end of the lake from Lake Hill, carried waste material from the winery. He noted a similar situation a year ago eased after some action was taken by the winery.

The alderman said he had no proof the winery is the source of trouble, but added:

"I strongly suspect a good brand of crackling rose that's coming down there now."

"You've spoiled my taste," replied Ald. Edith Gunning, who agreed the odor was "very bad tonight."

The municipal engineer was instructed to have the winery's effluent disposal system inspected.

Haxell said:

"We don't discharge into the creek."

He said there are holding and settling tanks at the winery which are pumped into the municipal sewer system at night after peak domestic periods have passed, a procedure approved by the municipality.

But Haxell referred to Blenkinsop Creek, which rises northest of the winery. He said it comes under Quadra Street via culvert and passes under the winery.

"It's coming in stagnated," Haxell complained.

He did not know where the smell originated.

And he was not concerned about the impending visit of a sanitary inspector: "We know we're not discharging into the creek."

Elevator Men Non-Committal

Representatives of the International Union of Elevator Constructors were non-committal this morning after meeting Labor Minister Bill King.

John Neil, the union's western representatives, told reporters "I would as soon make no comment."

He said he would be in telephone contact with King later today.

"I think everything will turn out all right," he said, without elaborating. "It will depend on quite a few phone calls."

He said mediation officer Gus Leonidas has not submitted his report on the dispute with five elevator companies but he expects this will be done in a day or two. The union can legally strike when the report is received.

King was not available for comment.

The union began seven months strike last September, part of a national walkout, but B.C. courts ruled it illegal because no bargaining had taken place in B.C. Union members returned to work just over three weeks ago.

Hearing Opens On Four Bids To Raid IWA

The B.C. Labor Relations Board this morning opened a hearing into four bids by Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada to take over bargaining rights from the International Woodworkers of America.

The closed-door hearing at the Victoria Law Courts was attended by representatives of the PPWC Nanaimo Local 8 and IWA Duncan Local 1-80.

The PPWC is seeking certification as bargaining agent for 450 employees at Ladysmith Forest Products, Saltair Lumber Co., CIPA Lumber and Mayo Lumber.

The board can order certification, reject the application or direct that a representation vote be held among the mill workers.

Bubba Reconsiders

BALTIMORE (AP) — Bubba Smith, who said he was through with Baltimore Colts when general manager Joe Thomas started trading off some veterans in January, has reconsidered.

Thomas said Monday the big defensive end, who sat out his sixth National Football League season last year after undergoing a knee operation, changed his mind after having time to consider the alternatives.

"I think Bubba would rather play in Baltimore than in several other cities we discussed," Thomas said. "he wants to play here, and he's serious about it."

10% HIKE SEEN IN GAS PRICE

Times News Services

A Montreal oil company executive said Tuesday he expects gasoline prices across Canada to increase by 10 to 12 per cent in the near future.

M. R. Boyer, vice-president of marketing for Calex, said transport costs have increased by 300 per cent in the past 15 months.

During this period, his company had to increase the price of gas by three cents a gallon.

He said he expects other major gasoline marketers to make further increases soon.

J. E. Jarrell of Shell Canada said that although his company has not yet raised its prices, it will soon reduce the amount of subsidies allowed to dealers in certain regions of Quebec and the Ottawa Valley where price reductions were instituted a short time ago.

In Vienna, 11 of the world's oil-producing countries have issued a 10-day ultimatum to the Western companies that market their oil to come up with a formula to break a price deadlock.

In the U.S., Sun Oil Co. announced Tuesday in Philadelphia that it will immediately begin rationing gasoline supplies for dealers, distributors and commercial customers.

Sun, the 10th largest U.S. oil company, said a shortage of crude oil forced it to put a "gasoline allocation system" into effect.

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon's re-election committee financed an elaborate campaign last May to give a distorted view of the U.S. public's response to the mining of Haiphong harbor, it has been learned.

The campaign included paying for telegrams to be sent to the White House and the placing of a deceptive, apparently illegal $4,400 ad in the New York Times on May 17.

On May 10, White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler said that telegrams, letters and telephone calls were running 5 or 6 to 1 in support of the president's action and cited them as an indication of "substantial support" of the mining.

One former Nixon campaign official said Tuesday that the Committee for the Re-election of the President was "totally mobilized for the biggest piece of deception — we never do anything honestly. Imagine, the president sending himself telegrams, patting himself on the back."

ENTIRE STAFF

Another former Nixon campaign official said that the Haiphong mining campaign "put the entrie staff in overdrive for two weeks . . . the work included petition drives, organizing rallies, bringing people in buses to Washington, organizing calls to the White House, getting voters to call their congressmen."

"We felt the Haiphong decision could make or break the president," the official said.

Apparently among the participants in the drive were at least two of the Watergate conspirators, Frank Sturgis and Bernard Barker.

The two, according to sources in Miami, showed up uninvited at a Cuban exile meeting and attempted to take over plans for organizing a demonstration there in support of the mining.

Sturgis later told a Washington Post reporter that he drove the lead truck in a convoy that participated in the demonstration.

$100 BILLS

At least $8,400 in cash campaign funds, mostly in $100 bills, was spent on the drive. This expenditure has not been reported to the General Accounting Office as required by law.

The expenditures were authorized by Jeb Stuart Magruder, who was deputy Nixon campaign manager under John Mitchell at the time, according to government sources.

Magruder reportedly has told prosecutors that he, along with former attorney-general Mitchell and presidential counsel John Dean, had approved the bugging of the Democrat's Watergate headquarters.

The ad in the New York Times, entitled The People vs. The New York Times, criticized a Times' editorial opposing the mining.

The ad was signed by 10 people and gave the appearance of representing citizens' support of the president's controversial decision.

Philip Joanou, the former executive vice-president of the November Group, which handled the Nixon committee's advertising, said Tuesday that the ad was paid for with 44 $100 bills sent from

PRITTIE WINS POST

Burnaby Mayor Bob Prittie, a former New Democratic Party member of the House of Commons, has won a civil service competition for the post of assistant deputy minister in the department of municipal affairs.

Municipal Affairs Deputy Minister W. K. Smith said today Prittie won the position over some 50 other applicants, 20 of whom were from within the B.C. civil service.

Prittie will resign as mayor of Burnaby to take the new position.

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

The price tag on the dry spell could be a whopper on Vancouver Island and other parts of the province.

Ruinous forest fires, dead fish, poor crops and dry wells may be the cost of below-average rain and snow since October.

Precipitation recorded at Gonzales for the seven-month period was 7.44 inches below average. At Victoria International Airport it was 3.24 inches below average.

So far this moisture precipitation at Gonzales is .53 inches below average and at the airport, .29 inches below.

Except for December, when torrential downpours on the holiday weekend changed the balance, each month's recordings since last October have been below average.

Forestry officials, conservationists and farmers Tuesday predicted serious trouble if the unusually dry conditions prevail too long.

A spokesman for the B.C. Forest Service said it's going to be a "dicey" forest fire season.

"We're hoping for the best but preparing for the worst."

Because of the record fall of snow and rain that preceded it, he said the 1972 season had been an unusually light one.

"It was a good year," he said, "with only 1,903 fires, compared to 1970 when, because of conditions similar to those we face now, there were more than 4,000 fires."

Even in the "good year," fires consumed an estimated 64,400 acres, costing the department about $2.3 million and another $1.7 million outlay by the industry and other agencies.

He said the 1970 figures were staggering — 260,958 acres burned out, a cost of $9,166,167 to the department plus several millions by the industry and others.

"It may well be a grim summer," the spokesman added. "The rivers and streams are very, very low. We have arranged for chartered water bombers and patrol craft. This could well be a bad one."

He said several fires have already been fought, some of them small, but still providing "some pretty tell-tale facts." The forest season officially begins Tuesday.

Concern for the drying-out streams was also voiced by

POWER SHORTAGE LOOMS

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba Hydro is preparing for a power shortage next fall and winter, hydro chairman Len Bateman told the legislature' public utilities committee Tuesday.

Bateman said this will be "an expensive year" in terms of thermal power generation that will be required to make up for lack of water power due to dry conditions.

Hydro is working to get its thermal generating stations into first-class condition for the winter.

Bateman said the entire power situation is being reviewed, and hydro will decide soon whether to increase Lake Winnipeg's level by blocking one of its Nelson River outlet channels, possibly by sinking barges in it.

This would increase the lake's water table to provide water for winter release through the Nelson River power dams.

Manitoba Hydro also is surveying the province's neighbors to see what can be done in terms of buying outside power, Bateman said.

Chaos Ahead

TOKYO (UPI) — Labor unions today called a 72-hour general transportation strike for Thursday, one day ahead of schedule, threatening to plunge Japan in its worst economic chaos in decades.

A commuter revolt against a showdown by railroad workers Tuesday led to bloody rioting at dozens of stations.

Scores of passengers and railroad employees were injured, and 130 arrested by about 18,000 riot police.

About six million passengers were affected as 13 of Japan's rail lines suspended service because of damage.

Thursday's walkout will include government employees, communications workers and employees of Japan Air Lines and All Nippon Airways. The general walkout seemed inevitable after Premier Kakuei Tanaka's government refused to accept civil servants' demands for the right to strike by government employees.

HEY GEORGE! THEY'LL YELL

OCEAN SHORES, Wash. (UPI) — The city fathers of this town have declared Friday as "Undiscovery Day," marking the 181st anniversary of the day Capt. George Vancouver sailed past Ocean Shores without discovering it.

Vancouver was en route to Nootka Sound, on Vancouver Island. To celebrate "Undiscovery Day," residents will go to the beach at midnight and yell in unison, "Hey George!"

Work Beats Welfare —Levi

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Most people would rather work than be on welfare, B.C. Social Services Minister Norm Levi told a federal-provincial conference here today.

He cited the need for flexibility in social assistance programs to allow provinces to determine the needs of their people and urged the federal government to speed up a time table to increase Canada Pension Plan benefits and a guaranteed minimum income for the disadvantaged.

Alberta agreed with federal proposals to beef up current plans, but advocated holding the line on suggestions for a universal guaranteed annual income and other broad approaches to social assistance.

In a position paper, Alberta Health Minister Neil Crawford said he supported the concept that individuals are responsible to themselves, their families and society to provide a living.

Increases in family allowance benefits, Canada Pension Plan provisions and income supplements to handicapped and disabled should be provided only for those incapable of taking care of themselves.

But the three Western New Democrat administrations — Manitoba and Saskatchewan as well as British Columbia stressed the need for a broad overhaul of present patchwork social assistance plans.

"Some of us are prevented by our political ideologies from doing anything," Levi said in an obvious dig at more conservative governments.

But "men of good will" should be able to come up with a workable system that would alow people a decent and dignified living.

Len Taylor of Saskatchewan said economic poverty "can and ought to be ended" in the country immediately.

He called for new approaches to the whole area of social welfare policy and said he hoped federal proposals to change the system would not get bogged down in discussion.

"While we sit and talk, many of our people suffer."

Welfare Minister Rene Toupin of Manitoba, in the most political statement, called for a federal policy of full employment together with a stronger social security system.

His government's programs to redistribute income, provide low-income housing and create jobs had helped keep the province's unemployment level low, he said.

Quebec's Claude Castonguay said any review of welfare systems should not set up distinctions between persons able to work, those unable to work and the rest of the population.

If programs were set up that enabled directors to classify benefit recipients it would be a fundamental departure from the approach that Quebec would like to see, he said.

Reds At Edge Of City

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH — Hundreds of refugees poured across the Mekong River to Phnom Penh today as Communist forces occupied positions directly opposite the city.

Refugees said the Communists were digging bunkers on the river bank at the village of Arei Khsat, only 1.7 miles from the centre of the capital.

Observers said the Communists could make use of the river bank as a superb site from which to shell the capital if they were able to hold out there until darkeness.

Cambodian planes bombed and strafed the village throughout the afternoon as crowds gathered on this side of the river to watch the air strikes.

By late afternoon, the din of fighting between ground troops was still going on and could be clearly heard here.

Reports of the Communist advance followed an announcement Tuesday night by Cambodian President Lon Nol that he will share power with three of his chief anti-Communist opponents.

Nol said he is creating a "high political council" made up of himself and the three most important opposition politicians — former premier Sisowath Sirik Matak; in Tam, former president of the National Assembly; and Cheng Heng, who was chief of state after the coup three years ago in which Nol and Siris Matak overthrew Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Teachers Hire Women's Protector

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — A full-time protector and promoter of women's rights in education will be appointed by the B.C. Teachers' Federation.

In a move that symbolizes support for a task force report which has found discrimination against women in all levels of education, the BCTF annual convention in Vancouver voted Tuesday to hire the extra staff member for a two-year term.

The staff member may be a male or female.

The 600 convention delegates approved five of seven major recommendations of the task force after more than two hours of debate that stirred more laughter, more booing and more emotion than any other on the agenda. (Other stories on Page 3.)

Greatest antagonism was aroused over a recommendation that, when all other qualifications are equal, females should be appointed to administrative posts in preference to males "until an equitable distribution of men and women in administrative positions exist."

The recommendation was soundly defeated.

In defending that motion, task force chairman Dorothy Glass told delegates that statistics overwhelmingly prove that men are preferred to women in positions of authority and strong action must be taken to correct this injustice.

Both men and women teachers strongly disagreed with Glass, calling the motion "reverse discrimination" which would exchange one form of sexual prejudice for another.

Much of the debate over appointment of full-time women's rights workers revolved around finances but one male teacher closed that discussion when he asked: "Do you really think spending one per cent of our budget to improve the status of 53 per cent of our membership is too much?"

One Victoria teacher, Corrie Reagan, was well-received in a long speech opposing the whole principle of the status of women report.

Reagan, a teacher at Esquimalt Senior Secondary School and a past-president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, said appointment of a special women's worker would split the federation.

If specific cases of discrimination are found, she said, the teachers' federation as a whole should use the Human Rights Act to fight the specific case.

After much argument the convention supported a recommendation advising the department of education and local school boards that the BCTF is concerned about textbooks and other materials "that consistently show women and men in stereotyped roles."

Many teachers, especially at the secondary level, opposed the motion saying it constituted "censorship" and "book burning."

It would involve, they said, exclusion of many literary masterpieces from school libraries and English courses.

Other motions recommended that every school board in B.C. examine the status of female students and teachers in their district and called for a BCTF program to ensure that "the problem of social and sex stereotyping" be examined in the training of teachers, guidance counsellors and librarians.

The other defeated recommendation called for research to determine if, and why, fewer girls than boys participate in sports programs at the school level.

The BCTF task force on the status of women has been working for more than two years and presented the convention with an 18-page report outlining 46 specific recommendations to improve the position of women in B.C. education.

MALARIA STRIKES VIET CANADIANS

By JAMES ANDERSON
Times Correspondent

SAIGON — An isolated outpost on a Viet Cong-controlled area of South Vietnam's Central Highlands has become a major medical headache for the International Commission of Control and Supervision.

Malaria has struck three Canadian and four other truce observers in the past two months at Duc Co, a former U.S. special forces camp near the Laotian border 225 miles northeast of Saigon.

Two Canadian officers have been sent home with malaria.

The problem is expected to get worse with the arrival of the rainy season in the next few months.

Falciprum malaria, the variety involved at Duc Co, causes a high fever which spurts up every three days.

Col. P. K. Tucker, chief medical officer of the Canadian contingent, says that it takes at least 19 days to cure the disease. Treatment requires large doses of quinine and other drugs which are fairly toxic in themselves.

The debilitating, mosquito-borne fever, caused by a parasite which attacks the red blood cells, is endemic in the area and proboably widespread among the Communist forces around Duc Co.

The disease can sometimes recur periodically for the rest of the victim's life. It can be fatal in a small fraction of cases even if treated promptly.

Although the Canadians in such areas take pills every day to help ward off the disease, Col. Tucker says the only real answer would be an effective mosquito control program.

400 Million Blackbirds —All Heading This Way?

Being some selected items from a man's personal diary:

★ ★ ★

Item: One of those fine, serene mornings when everything seemed right and proper in my tiny world . . . or did, at any rate, until I arrived at the office and found the note from Philip Prichard, the Seattle writer with whom I've been corresponding these many years.

Seems Phil has been looking into a little-known branch of the Smithsonian Institute called The Centre For Short-Lived Phenomena, in which Canada has no less than 99 of the 275 participating scientists from 22 nations and, while Phil is enthusiastic about its work, to me it is just a gloomy reminder of the disaster and doom that waits around every corner. Fair ruined my day, it did.

In one short period, just for example, the centre investigated 71 major volcanic eruptions, 86 major earthquakes, 57 major oil-spills, 40 major fireballs, 15 wayward meteorites, 137 ecological crises, as well as landslides, storm surges, tsunamis (ocean waves from underwater disturbances), tidal waves, major floods and forest fires.

Typical of the kind of thing that can happen to you when you least expect it is the blackbird and starling disaster. No less than three million blackbirds and starlings, it seems, descended upon 40 acres of wooded land on the edge of the small town of Scotland Neck, North Carolina. The people tried everything — sprayed the birds with detergent, played recorded blackbird distress calls, even set off explosives — but nothing worked. A year later there were more than six million birds at Scotland Neck and one of the Centre's scientists has now estimated that in North America there are four hundred million blackbirds and starlings.

I will not be at all surprised if these birds are now on the wing, heading my way for one of those "short-lived phenomena" that awaits us all.

Item: An invitation through the mail today to join the newest thing in book clubs, called "The Behavioral Science Book Service" and I am wondering how in the world my name got on that list.

The introductory offer of any three books for a mere $3.95 invites me to choose from, among others, these titles:

"The Shame and Guilt in Neurosis" — an objective basis for distinguishing the central emotions of shame and guilt.

"Pathways to Madness" — innovative study of the relationship of family structure to emotional breakdown.

"Depression—Comparative Studies of Normal, Neurotic and Psychotic Conditions" — a crucial contribution to the psychological understanding and treatment of depression.

"The Neuroses" — clinical and phenomenological aspects.

"Sanity, Madness and The Family" — focuses on each member of the family of schizophrenic patients.

"Violence and the Struggle for Existence" — investigation of all aspects of violence.

"Bereavement" — the ways in which men and women react to the experience.

Do they know something I don't know? If they do, I don't want to know.

Item: Some astonishing figures this morning from Gabriola Island where, it seems, a door-to-door survey has established that a majority of residents actually favor a terminal for the Vancouver ferry and the four-lane highway and bridges that it will entail.

It somewhat confirms my suspicion that there's been a profound change in the kind of person who seeks the island existence. Time was when they were all escapists searching for a place surrounded by water from which to look at the world.

In his book, "One Man's Island," David Conover, put it rather well:

"The beauty of island life is that it bleaches out nearly all the impurities of what has gone before," Dave wrote. "It provides distance and quietude for value judgments. Thus, unknowingly, I have become an anachronism. I am a free man. Like a young gull who is no longer nestbound, but who has wings with which to soar and cares little what land he roams over or into which river, lake, or sea he swoops for fish. The island could as well be off the coast of Spain or Madagascar. For I am bounded by no system of things, no border except that of truth . . ."

That was the motivation of most island-seekers in the past. But more and more, travelling through the gulf islands, I find a new breed who seek simply a cleaner environment than the city, a place to raise a family or follow a career. They are more interested in the conveniences, the hospitals, the schools, the good roads, even the bridges that will provide quicker links with civilization. Nearly all of the eccentrics have died off. Now there is a kind of middle-class suburban population with chambers of commerce and service clubs and the rest.

The concern that the gulf islands may lose their character becomes even greater with the realization that the character of their people has changed already.

22 Motorists Charged At Long Beach

Twenty-two charges were laid against drivers running their cars on the restricted beach area in Pacific Rim National Park at Long Beach over the Easter weekend, Reg Joscelyn, acting park superintendent, said today.

Cars are restricted to a three-mile stretch of beach, he said.

Meanwhile, Mayor Al Russell of Ucluelet said the federal parks department should lose no time establishing a proper camping ground.

"An Alberta resident is constructing a large camping ground outside the village," he said. "But this is not going to be sufficient to cope with the large crowds that come here."

He said cars were bumper to bumper in the village over the weekend.

He also said he was disappointed that the federal parks department did not inform the regional district it was not including a section of Kennedy Lake in the park.

The Kennedy Lake property is about three miles from the Tofino-Ucluelett highway and was under federal jurisdiction. It was turned over to the provincial government on April 1 which intends to develop the area as a day park.

"More people are finding out about the Kennedy Lake area and are using it," the mayor said.

ANCHORS AWAY

Saanich will enforce its zoning bylaw to prevent the use of anchored or moored boats for non-transient living accommodation.

Municipal planning committee Tuesday was told an anchored catamaran at Cordova Bay last year had been used for a home.

Planner Tom Loney reported the bylaw covers the matter because the municipal boundary extends 1,000 feet offshore. The zoning is for civic institutional use and living aboard a vessel is a prohibited use.

Oak Bay Stands Pat On Salaries

Oak Bay aldermen — facing a $3,892,468 preliminary budget calling for a six-mill tax increase — decided Tuesday night to forego a salary increase for themselves.

Unlike many other municipalities, they will hold the line at $6,300 for Mayor Frances Elford and $2,400 for aldermen.

The decision was made at council's first budget-paring session which resulted in only minor pruning.

Mayor Elford said she would be in favor of a seven per cent increase for aldermen, but not for herself.

Speaking against an increase, Ald. Brian Smith said, "I don't think we should follow the example of other councils. I think we're adequately paid."

He added that aldermanic stipends should not become of a size that they would become attractive as a means of rounding out incomes.

Ald. Shirley Dowell agreed, "This is not the year for increases," she said, "when we're building a recreation centre. We shouldn't follow the lead of other councils."

However, council decided to raise the amount spent on attending conventions.

Originally set at $4,840, this was raised to $6,221.

Foreign Control Worry 'Foolish'

It is foolish to worry about buying out foeign-owned companies when Canadian savings could be put to much better use, says IBM Canada Ltd. president L. K. Lodge of Don Mills, Ont.

Canadian resources should be used to start up new companies rather than to buy existing firms, he told a luncheon meeting today of Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce at The Empress.

He said for Canadians to buy up even 25 per cent of IBM Canada Ltd. it would cost $280 million.

"That is as much as the total capital invested last year in all new equity issues in Canada. Just visualize the impact of $280 million in the creation of new Canadian ventures in data processing.

One of the things that seems to bother many Canadians is the feeling that because companies like ours are foreign-owned, they are also foreign-controlled to the degree that national sovereignty is endangered.

"But, in fact, nothing could be further from the truth," Lodge said.

"To suggest that companies like my own run roughshod over national objectives is to ignore the whole spectrum of Canadian legislation, tax and tariff policies, the controls exerted by the marketplace and the influence of Canadian management itself."

He said the company employs 9,000 in Canada and all officers and all but one of the 14 directors of IBM Canada Ltd. are Canadian.

"But the one thing that should set the argument to rest is common sense. We are here for the long pull. We have been in business here for more than 60 years and we plan to be here for a lot more."

Nuns Remain, So Do Guards

Three nuns complete their sixth week of sitting in at St. Mary's Priory today as guards hired by an opposing faction continue to bar them from most of the building.

Sisters Mary Agnes Eaton, Mary Josephine Donovan and Mary Lucy Ford have been locked from all but a basement kitchen and an upstairs wing of bedrooms and washrooms since they refused to vacate the priory March 15.

Members of the Society of the Love of Jesus, they are engaged in a long-standing dispute with another group of members led by Sister Leonette Hoesing. The three sisters contend Sister Leonette was ineligible to be elected mother prioress and have refused to recognize her authority.

Supporting the three are Mother Cecilia Mary, who operates the Good Shepherd aniaml shelter at Mill Bay, and one of her assistants, Sister Mary Julia.

At issue is control of the society, which Mother Cecilia founded and headed for 30 years. It has about $500,000 in liquid assets and property worth an estimated $1 million.

The three Sisters wrote a lengthy letter to Bishop Remi de Roo and Sister Léonette on April 6, setting out their views on a number of points in dispute, and are still awaiting a reply.

★ ★ ★

Meanwhile, they noted Tuesday that the other side has spent an estimated $3,800 of the society's funds to date paying for the Western Home Guard Patrol which continues on duty through most of the priory day and night.

It has cost Mother Cecilia about $2,000 for the guards she hired to counter the Western patrol.

In their letter to the bishop and Sister Leonette, the sisters said of the guards: ". . . we have been told that they have been placed there for reasons of 'security.' Security from what? From tre depredations of three sisters that love.. the priory and every square inch of it . . .?"

Hugh McMillan, lawyer for the three sisters, said Tuesday that trying to deal with the other faction is like talking to a wall.

And spending on security guards "is not doing any deserving elderly people any good at all."

The society operates a home for senior citizens and a hospital for chronically ill, mostly elderly people.

'I Know I Can Overcome' Drug Habit, Court Told

★

A 21-year-old Victoria man, who returned to his heroin habit less than a month after he was released from jail, today was sentenced to two years in prison on charges involving a $850 theft and five counts of break and enter.

Anthony Gough, 3244 Quadra, told Judge William Ostler he was released March 21 after serving a 13-month term, "and ran into the wrong people and got involved in heroin again.

"I know I can overcome drugs, I'm older now. I just made that one big mistake," he said.

Gough asked that Ostler consider a penitentiary term so he could work towards rehabilitating himself.

"If I come up in front of you again, you can be as harsh as you wish," he said.

Before sentencing Ostler said "something has to be done to get him sufficiently out of this environment so when he comes out he'll be off drugs.

"If you demonstrate to them (jail officials) what you're saying to me they'll refer you to the penitentiary and you can work towards your day passes," said Ostler.

Prosecutor John Macintyre said Gough had a strong reason to get money for drugs.

Gough admitted taking $850 cash from the manager's office in the Shop Easy store, 2187 Oak Bay, Thursday. Police recovered $364.

He also admitted five break-ins in which a total of $195 was taken early Thursday from four shops in Bastion Square.

Kenneth Wayne Ramsay, 22, of 1536 Wilmot, pleaded guilty Tuesday to a similar break-in charge involving the same incident and was remanded to May 10 for sentence and pre-sentence report.

A charge against him involving the Shopeasy theft was withdrawn at Macintyre's request.

Nod for Alley Plan

A rehabilitation proposal which would paint up historic Fan Tan Alley and fill it with boutiques will get a favorable recommendation from Victoria's advisory planning commission at city council's Thursday meeting.

The commission reports it "agrees in principle" with the proposal of Milton Tisdale.

The Alley proposal would be the centre of a block-wide redevelopment bounded by Pandora, Store, Fisgard and Government.

The commission recommends turning down an application to build a four-storey motel on the James Bay waterfront at Dallas and St. Lawrence, on the grounds that a new community plan schedules Ogden Point for family residential use.

Publication of forthcoming council business has been newly authorized by the city.

Divided House Still Serving Renters

By WAYNE HARDING
Times Staff

Greater Victoria Rental Aid Service is still in business despite a wrangle that has split the membership into two camps and led to plans to dissolve the organization as a registered society.

"I'm still finding housing for people and I'll still be doing it after Arpil 30 (the date of the planned dissolution)," Jim Nelson, founder of the agency and acting president, said this morning.

The agency had operated for 12 months — placing low-income people in apartments and houses — before it was incorporated under the Societies Act last month.

At the first meeting of the society April 12, the members — most of whom are women working for the agency on welfare incentive grants — split. The meeting failed even to nominate a first board of directors for the organization.

Nelson charged today that collusion among some members of the staff had resulted in the dispute.

"All sorts of things were going on behind my back," he said.

"I have warned this would happen if we formed a society," he said.

Nelson and his supporters hope the society will be formally dissolved at a special meeting April 30.

Meanwhile, four members who were formerly employees of the agency are pressing for continuation of the society.

"We want a democratically-elected board and president," said one of the four, Mrs. E. P. Mitchell, who has been secretary of the agency.

But, she said, if the supporters of society-status fail to win the vote on April 30, "we're prepared to go down to the courthouse the next morning and start all over again with a new society."

She said the staff has considerable knowledge of the work required and is well qualified to operate a rental agency for poor people.

The women have been assured of incentive grant assistance in the meantime, Mrs. Mitchell said.

The society has 41 members and recruitment of new members has been stopped pending the outcome of the April 30 meeting.

Nixon Team Faked Ad

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon's re-election committee financed an elaborate campaign last May to give a distorted view of the U.S. public's response to the mining of Haiphong harbor, it has been learned.

The campaign included paying for telegrams to be sent to the White House and the placing of a deceptive, apparently illegal $4,400 ad in the New York Times on May 17.

On May 10, White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler said that telegrams, letters and telephone calls were running 5 or 6 to 1 in support of the president's action and cited them as an indication of "substantial support" of the mining.

One former Nixon campaign official said Tuesday that the Committee for the Re-election of the President was "totally mobilized for the biggest piece of deception — we never do anything honestly. Imagine, the president sending himself telegrams, patting himself on the back."

ENTIRE STAFF

Another former Nixon campaign official said that the Haiphong mining campaign "put the entire staff in overdrive for two weeks . . . the work included petition drives, organizing rallies, bringing people in buses to Washington, organizing calls to the White House, getting voters to call their congressmen."

"We felt the Haiphong decision could make or break the president," the official said.

Apparently among the participants in the drive were at least two of the Watergate conspirators, Frank Sturgis and Bernard Barker.

The two, according to sources in Miami, showed up uninvited at a Cuban exile meeting and attempted to take over plans for organizing a demonstration there in support of the mining.

Sturgis later told a Washington Post reporter that he drove the lead truck in a convoy that participated in the demonstration.

$100 BILLS

At least $8,400 in cash campaign funds, mostly in $100 bills, was spent on the drive. This expenditure has not been reported to the General Accounting Office as required by law.

The expenditures were authorized by Jeb Stuart Magruder, who was deputy Nixon campaign manager under John Mitchell at the time, according to government sources.

Magruder reportedly has told prosecutors that he, along with former attorney-general Mitchell and presidential counsel John Dean, had approved the bugging of the Democrat's Watergate headquarters.

The ad in the New York Times, entitled The People vs. The New York Times, criticized a Times' editorial opposing the mining.

The ad was signed by 10 people and gave the appearance of representing citizens' support of the president's controversial decision.

Philip Joanou, the former executive vice-president of the November Group, which handled the Nixon committee's advertising, said Tuesday that the ad was paid for with 44 $100 bills sent from

10% HIKE SEEN IN GAS PRICE

Times News Services

A Montreal oil company executive said Tuesday he expects gasoline prices across Canada to increase by 10 to 12 per cent in the near future.

M. R. Boyer, vice-president of marketing for Calex, said transport costs have increased by 300 per cent in the past 15 months.

During this period, his company had to increase the price of gas by three cents a gallon.

He said he expects other major gasoline marketers to make further increases soon.

J. E. Jarrell of Shell Canada said that although his company has not yet raised its prices, it will soon reduce the amount of subsidies allowed to dealers in certain regions of Quebec and the Ottawa Valley where price reductions were instituted a short time ago.

In Vienna, 11 of the world's oil-producing countries have issued a 10-day ultimatum to the Western companies that market their oil to come up with a formula to break a price deadlock.

In the U.S., Sun Oil Co. announced Tuesday in Philadelphia that it will immediately begin rationing gasoline supplies for dealers, distributors and commercial customers.

Sun, the 10th largest U.S. oil company, said a shortage of crude oil forced it to put a "gasoline allocation system" into effect.

Prittie will resign as mayor of Burnaby to take the new position.

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

The price tag on the dry spell could be a whopper on Vancouver Island and other parts of the province.

Ruinous forest fires, dead fish, poor crops and dry wells may be the cost of below-average rain and snow since October.

Precipitation recorded at Gonzales for the seven-month period was 7.44 inches below average. At Victoria International Airport it was 3.24 inches below average.

So far this month moisture precipitation at Gonzales is .53 inches below average and at the airport, .29 inches below.

Except for December, when torrential downpours on the holiday weekend changed the balance, each month's recordings since last October have been below average.

Forestry officials, conservationists and farmers Tuesday predicted serious trouble if the unusually dry conditions prevail too long.

A spokesman for the B.C. Forest Service said it's going to be a "dicey" forest fire season.

"We're hoping for the best but preparing for the worst."

Because of the record fall of snow and rain that preceded it, he said the 1972 season had been an unusually light one.

"It was a good year," he said, "with only 1,903 fires, compared to 1970 when, because of conditions similar to those we face now, there were more than 4,000 fires."

Even in the "good year," fires consumed an estimated 64,400 acres, costing the department about $2.3 million and another $1.7 million outlay by the industry and other agencies.

He said the 1970 figures were staggering — 260,958 acres burned out, a cost of $9,166,167 to the department plus several millions by the industry and others.

"It may well be a grim summer," the spokesman added. "The rivers and streams are very, very low. We have arranged for chartered water bombers and patrol craft. This could well be a bad one."

He said several fires have already been fought, some of them small, but still providing "some pretty tell-tale facts." The forest season officially begins Tuesday.

Concern for the drying-out streams was also voiced by

POWER SHORTAGE LOOMS

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba Hydro is preparing for a power shortage next fall and winter, hydro chairman Len Bateman told the legislature' public utilities committee Tuesday.

Bateman said this will be "an expensive year" in terms of thermal power generation that will be required to make up for lack of water power due to dry conditions.

Hydro is working to get its thermal generating stations into first-class condition for the winter.

Bateman said the entire power situation is being reviewed, and hydro will decide soon whether to increase Lake Winnipeg's level by blocking one of its Nelson River outlet channels, possibly by sinking barges in it.

This would increase the lake's water table to provide water for winter release through the Nelson River power dams.

Manitoba Hydro also is surveying the province's neighbors to see what can be done in terms of buying outside power, Bateman said.

Chaos Ahead

TOKYO (UPI) — Labor unions today called a 72-hour general transportation strike for Thursday, one day ahead of schedule, threatening to plunge Japan in its worst economic chaos in decades.

A commuter revolt against a showdown by railroad workers Tuesday led to bloody rioting at dozens of stations.

Scores of passengers and railroad employees were injured and 130 arrested by about 18,000 riot police.

About six million passengers were affected as 13 of Japan's rail lines suspended service because of damage.

Thursday's walkout will include government employees, communications workers and employees of Japan Air Lines and All Nippon Airways. The general walkout seemed inevitable after Premier Kakuei Tanaka's government refused to accept civil servants' demands for the right to strike by government employees.

HEY GEORGE! THEY'LL YELL

OCEAN SHORES, Wash. (UPI) — The city fathers of this town have declared Friday as "Undiscovery Day," marking the 181st anniversary of the day Capt. George Vancouver sailed past Ocean Shores without discovering it.

Vancouver was en route to Nootka Sound, on Vancouver Island. To celebrate "Undiscovery Day," residents will go to the beach at midnight and yell in unison, "Hey George!"

NEWS BRIEFS

$10,000 Reward

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP)— Two employees of Brinks Express Co. of Canada Ltd., wanted in connection with the theft of $700,000 from the company's vault, have a $10,000 price on their heads today. Convictions are not a prerequisite for the reward offered by Brinks.

Jet Forced Down

LONDON (UPI) — A British jet airliner carrying 83 passengers to Mauritius was forced to land by fighter planes in Somalia, East Africa, today. Local Somalia radio said the passengers were welcomed by the minister of tourism before being taken to a hotel.

Navy Aid Sought

LONDON (UPI) — Angry British fishermen sought talks today with the government that may include a plea for naval support following the latest clashes in the "Cod War" between British trawlers and Icelandic gunboats. Political sources said the British government was taking the incidents very seriously, but remained opposed to the navy being called in to protect the trawlers.

Buildings Bombed

MILAN (Reuter)—Rightwing political extremists bombed Communist and Socialist party buildings here as Italy prepared to mark the 28th anniversary today of its liberation from Nazi domination. Nobody was hurt in the attacks.

Work Beats Welfare —Levi

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Most people would rather work than be on welfare, B.C. Social Services Minister Norm Levi told a federal-provincial conference here today.

He cited the need for flexibility in social assistance programs to allow provinces to determine the needs of their people and urged the federal government to speed up a timetable to increase Canada Pension Plan benefits and a guaranteed minimum income for the disadvantaged.

Alberta agreed with federal proposals to beef up current plans, but advocated holding the line on suggestions for a universal guaranteed annual income and other broad approaches to social assistance.

In a position paper, Alberta Health Minister Neil Crawford said he supported the concept that individuals are responsible to themselves, their families and society to provide a living.

Increases in family allowance benefits, Canada Pension Plan provisions and income supplements to handicapped and disabled should be provided only for those incapable of taking care of themselves.

But the three Western New Democrat administrations — Manitoba and Saskatchewan as well as British Columbia stressed the need for a broad overhaul of present patchwork social assistance plans.

"Some of us are prevented by our political ideologies from doing anything," Levi said in an obvious dig at more conservative governments.

But "men of good will" should be able to come up with a workable system that would allow people a decent and dignified living.

Len Taylor of Saskatchewan said economic poverty "can and ought to be ended" in the country immediately.

He called for new approaches to the whole area of social welfare policy and said he hoped federal proposals to change the system would not get bogged down in discussion.

"While we sit and talk, many of our people suffer."

Welfare Minister Rene Toupin of Manitoba, in the most political statement, called for a federal policy of full employment together with a stronger socjal security system.

His government's programs to redistribute income, provide low-income housing and create jobs had helped keep the province's unemployment level low, he said.

Quebec's Claude Castonguay said any review of welfare systems should not set up distinctions between persons able to work, those unable to work and the rest of the population.

If programs were set up that enabled directors to classify benefit recipients it would be a fundamental departure from the approach that Quebec would like to see, he said.

Reds At Edge Of City

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH — Hundreds of refugees poured across the Mekong River to Phnom Penh today as Communist forces occupied positions directly opposite the city.

Refugees said the Communists were digging bunkers on the river bank at the village of Arei Khsat, only 1.7 miles from the centre of the capital.

Observers said the Communists could make use of the river bank as a superb site from which to shell the capital if they were able to hold out there until darkeness.

Cambodian planes bombed and strafed the village throughout the afternoon as crowds gathered on this side of the river to watch the air strikes.

By late afternoon, the din of fighting between ground troops was still going on and could be clearly heard here.

Reports of the Communist advance followed an announcement Tuesday night by Cambodian President Lon Nol that he will share power with three of his chief anti-Communist opponents.

Nol said he is creating a "high political council" made up of himself and the three most important opposition politicians — former premier Sisowath Sirik Matak; In Tam, former president of the National Assembly; and Cheng Heng, who was chief of state after the coup three years ago in which Nol and Sirik Matak overthrew Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Teachers Hire Women's Protector

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — A full-time protector and promoter of women's rights in education will be appointed by the B.C. Teachers' Federation.

In a move that symbolizes support for a task force report which has found discrimination against women in all levels of education, the BCTF annual convention in Vancouver voted Tuesday to hire the extra staff member for a two-year term.

The staff member may be a male or female.

The 600 convention delegates approved five of seven major recommendations of the task force after more than two hours of debate that stirred more laughter, more booing and more emotion than any other on the agenda. (Other stories on Page 3.)

Greatest antagonism was aroused over a recommendation that, when all other qualifications are equal, females should be appointed to administrative posts in preference to males "until an equitable distribution of men and women in administrative positions exist."

The recommendation was soundly defeated.

In defending that motion, task force chairman Dorothy Glass told delegates that statistics overwhelmingly prove that men are preferred to women in positions of authority and strong action must be taken to correct this injustice.

Both men and women teachers strongly disagreed with Glass, calling the motion "reverse discrimination" which would exchange one form of sexual prejudice for another.

Much of the debate over appointment of full-time women's rights workers revolved around finances but one male teacher closed that discussion when he asked: "Do you really think spending one per cent of our budget to improve the status of 53 per cent of our membership is too much?"

One Victoria teacher, Corrie Reagan, was well-received in a long speech opposing the whole principle of the status of women report.

Reagan, a teacher at Esquimalt Senior Secondary School and a past-president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, said appointment of a special women's worker would split the federation.

If specific cases of discrimination are found, she said, the teachers' federation as a whole should use the Human Rights Act to fight the specific case.

After much argument the convention supported a recommendation advising the department of education and local school boards that the BCTF is concerned about textbooks and other materials "that consistently show women and men in stereotyped roles."

Many teachers, especially at the secondary level, opposed the motion saying it constituted "censorship" and "book burning."

It would involve, they said, exclusion of many literary masterpieces from school libraries and English courses.

Other motions recommended that every school board in B.C. examine the status of female students and teachers in their district and called for a BCTF program to ensure that "the problem of social and sex stereotyping" be examined in the training of teachers, guidance counsellors and librarians.

The other defeated recommendation called for research to determine if, and why, fewer girls than boys participate in sports programs at the school level.

The BCTF task force on the status of women has been working for more than two years and presented the convention with an 18-page report outlining 46 specific recommendations to improve the position of women in B.C. education.

MALARIA STRIKES VIET CANADIANS

By JAMES ANDERSON
Times Correspondent

SAIGON — An isolated outpost on a Viet Cong-controlled area of South Vietnam's Central Highlands has become a major medical headache for the International Commission of Control and Supervision.

Malaria has struck three Canadian and four other truce observers in the past two months at Duc Co, a former U.S. special forces camp near the Laotian border 225 miles northeast of Saigon.

Two of the Canadian officers have been sent home.

The problem is expected to get worse with the arrival of the rainy season in the next few months.

Falciprum malaria, the variety involved at Duc Co, causes a high fever which spurts up every three days.

Col. P. K. Tucker, chief medical officer of the Canadian contingent, says that it takes at least 19 days to cure the disease. Treatment requires large doses of quinine and other drugs which are fairly toxic in themselves.

The debilitating, mosquito-borne fever, caused by a parasite which attacks the red blood cells, is endemic in the area and proboably widespread among the Communist forces around Duc Co.

The disease can sometimes recur periodically for the rest of the victim's life. It can be fatal in a small fraction of cases even if treated promptly.

Although the Canadians in such areas take pills every day to help ward off the disease, Col. Tucker says the only real answer would be an effective mosquito control program.

Hand Wringing in the White House*

Staff Subservient Do-As-You're-Told Types

By LOU CANON
The Washington Post

KEY BISCAYNNE, Fla. — The other night when Richard Nixon took a two-hour cruise on the Potomac on the presidential yacht Sequoia, one White House staffer asked another, who had accompanied the president. The aide was told that the president had gone alone.

"I found myself wondering," the first aide recalled later, "Who it was that the president really had taken with him."

There is nothing surprising about the president taking a solitary cruise in the middle of his latest and most damaging crisis. It has been his pattern in every crisis of the past, and his privacy has often been the prelude to the announcement of an unanticipated and dramatic strategy.

But the aide's suspicion about what in this case was the truth is itself more reflective than anything his superiors, or even the president, are likely to say about the most important change within the White House.

For the first time the president now lacks credibility within his own official family. For the first time his words and actions are being doubted by those who have loyally followed Mr. Nixon, who labored for his re-election and who value him as a decisive and capable chief executive.

"I've thought of just quietly quitting and getting myself a business job," says one such staffer. "But if I left now, it would look like I had something to do with Watergate, which I don't. And my friends who stayed behind would think me an informer or a newspaper source. So I've just tried to do my job and forget about it. Some days I don't even read the morning paper."

Another lower-level staffer says he thought of circulating a petition expressing the disgust of White House staffers at the way the Watergate investigation has been handled. He discarded the idea.

"The only thing that would happen is that all of us who signed the petition would be fired," he said. "It wouldn't accomplish a thing."

This aide believes that most members of the White House staff are "basically subservient, do-as-you're-told types" who are likely to remain loyal to the president no matter what happens. In his own case, this aide says that he thought many times about quitting, but he has decided to stick it out.

Perhaps there are many such White House staffers who feel the same way and regard the others as "basically subservient."

One aide tells of a party the other night, attended mostly but not exclusively by White House people, where everyone "looked at each other suspiciously, drank with great care and never mentioned Watergate." He compared it to a scene from "The Godfather" and to the Mafia tradition of Omerta, the code of silence.

Unlike the members of the murderous Corleone "family" in "The Godfather," however, the White House aides purportedly implicated in the Watergate case have been anything but silent. There are some indications that the high-level talkativeness has become contagious.

"I'm kind of fascinated by it," says a White House secretary, who admits she thought the Watergate case was "just newspaper talk" during the campaign. "It's fascinating to pick up the paper every day and read something about people you know and wonder, "who's going to be named next?"

She believes her "fascination" is widely shared among her friends at the White House and says that the subject has become a staple, if guarded, subject of conversation at the White House mess.

Much of the interest among White House staffers, centers on what will happen "after Haldeman." It is an unstated presumption among staffers who are willing to talk about it that No. 1 presidential aide H. R. Haldeman will leave, whether or not he turns out to have had knowledge of Watergate.

"What Bob had going for him was his competence," says one staffer who has never particularly liked him. "That's all blown away now, no matter what happens."

Though Haldeman has been frequently linked in Teutonic name association outside the White House with No. 1 domestic adviser John Ehrlichman, the two men are seen as distinctly unalike within the cloistered confines of the White House.

Ehrlichman is considered more approachable, less suspicious, more interested in the content of specific programs. He is by far the more popular figure of the two.

But it is also considered unlikely that Ehrlichman will take over Haldeman's role. In fact, some staffers believe there never will be "another Haldeman" in the Nixon administration, although someone clearly will wind up with the key assignment of controlling access to the president.

It is this "gatekeeper" role that is widely considered the source of Haldeman's power in the Nixon administration —as it was the scurce of Sherman Adams' power under President Eisenhower. But Haldeman has vastly more power than Adams had, because Haldeman has also exercised a line-officer operational authority of controlling staff and office assignments.

Watergate Complex in Washington Where Bugging Is the Byword

Nielsen's Naughty Questions

Tories Take Hard Line

By PETER DESBARATS

Questions raised by Conservative MP Erik Nielsen about the competence and political neutrality of the Trudeau government Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group (PSPAG) are so fundamental, detailed and explosive that even members of his own party are nervous about their implications.

The verbal questions which Nielsen has put to Solicitor-General Warren Allmand this session were only a prelude to the 29 written questions which appeared on the order paper under his name on April 6.

These questions indicate such an intimate knowledge of the state security apparatus that government sources admit, privately, that Nielsen is being supplied with inside information.

But not even members of his own caucus know more than that. While his general line of questioning in the House has been discussed beforehand within David MacDonald's group that plans Opposition strategy for the question periods, the written questions of April 6 were never outlined in detail for Nielsen's colleagues.

No Warning

Members of MacDonald's group particularly deny having received any advance warning of Nielsen's Question 17 concerning the background of Lt.-Col. Walter J. Dabros of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group. Nielsen asked whether Dabros "has undergone psychoanalysis for personality problems or for any other reason while employed with the Canadian Armed Forces" and whether the force's directorate of security ever reported adversely "on aggressive behavior" by Col. Dabros.

Asked for his personal reaction to this question, a front-bench member of the Conservative caucus said that he was "horrified" by it.

While it will probably be weeks before answers to the 29 questions are tabled in the House, the defence department responded promptly and unequivocally to Question 17 last week by promoting the 40-year-old Dabros to full colonel and appointing him director of security at defence headquarters in Ottawa.

Contacted at his law office in Whitehorse, Yukon, this week and asked for a comment on Dabros' promotion, Nielsen said, "I've never hesitated in the past to make an apology if I've been wrong about something."

Among the 29 questions, the Dabros item is in a category by itself. Most of the other questions relate to the structure, personnel and activities of PSPAG and other federal security groups. A number of questions are devoted to alleged contacts between these groups and the Liberal party in Ottawa and Quebec.

For instance, Nielsen asks whether PSPAG has conveyed information to "Premier Bourassa and to the Quebec Liberal Party." He asks for information about security screening of applications for local initiatives grants, and about whatever role the Liberal party MPs might play in approving L.I.P. grants. Other questions relate to alleged security surveillance of labor unions and university campuses.

If the factual basis for Nielsen's questions remains unclear, even to his fellow Conservatives, his motivation is no secret. It does not stem primarily from a concern about civil liberties but from a fundamental disagreement with the Trudeau government's decision to add a "civilian" body to the security apparatus that traditionally has been under RCMP control.

This move was recommended by the royal commission on security in 1969 which proposed that there should be a "security secretariat" in the privy council office, and that the security function of the RCMP should eventually be taken over by a civilian non-police agency operating in liaison with the RCMP.

Without fully implementing these recommendations, the government has moved in this direction by promising that the security service of the RCMP will be "increasingly separate in structure and civilian in nature," and by attaching the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group to the solicitor-general's office.

Secret Police Force?

PSPAG now has a staff of 10 officials and four secretaries and an annual budget of about $200,000.

The solicitor-general has repeatedly denied allegations from both Conservative and NDP members that this is a "secret police force" and insisted that it has no authority to do anything but research, plan and advise the government on security matters.

The central issue that concerns both Solicitor-General Allmand and Nielsen is the independence of the security apparatus from political interference.

Nielsen's belief that this is an area of government activity which has to be watched closely, even suspiciously, is correct. But the same careful scrutiny has to be applied to the intentions and tactics of all members of Parliament when they deal with this area, particularly when they zero in on individuals who have no possibility of immediate reply.

Machine Age Unemployment

By ISRAEL BERKOVITCH
The Manchester Guardian

The first conference on industrial robot technology has just ended at Nottingham University.

What do the machines look like and what can they do?

One which attempts to copy and replace a human operator directly is the spray-painting robot described by K. M. Haugan of Norway. This has an operating arm mounted on a base and an electronic control unit with a magnetic tape memory. The active part has five movements—the horizontal, hip, the shoulder, the elbow and two hand wrist movements. Programming calls for no expert knowledge.

After the machine is set up, a skilled spray-gun operator takes the spray gun into his right hand and leads the robot through the desired movements to give the product a perfect coat of paint. Switches are thrown and the robot is then ready for action; it will repeat the program in exactly the way it was taught whenever a new product comes into position.

★ ★ ★

Others shown in the exhibition accompanying the conference were able to pick up components from stockpiles, assemble them on a jig, even screw them together and put them into another storage place.

The conference heard papers on applying such devices in hot forging, die casting, plastic molding, welding, handling explosives, machine loading and other industrial applications.

The industrial applications, as Professor Donald Michie of Edinburgh University pointed out, of robotics in general require very little machine intelligence and the consequent programming.

Programs have been developed for sorting objects by visual appearance, packing objects into a confined space and stacking rings on a peg. Their goals of designing systems which are not only teachable but self-programmable can readily lead to the kind of apprehension or, at least, critical examination of the results of these developments which was also ably expressed at the same conference.

★ ★ ★

Apart from academic contributions, both British and Swedish trade union representatives were available to indicate, in essence, that just as war is much too serious to be left to the military, so robotics is too major a social development to be left to its own technical enthusiasts.

The latter claim that these machines will be introduced to replace humans mainly in intolerable situations—too hot, noisy, radioactive, or simply too tedious.

But M. J. Cooley, a design engineer, said they could free men from soul-destroying tasks; but are more likely to be used to maximize profits than to improve the quality of life.

And the basic question, coming from a union organizing both designers and operators, was not satisfactorily answered at the conference; it was, "why design machines for pattern recognition while we have 700,000 unemployed who are already skilled at pattern recognition?"

THE MORALIST IN TROUBLE

By JOHN NICHOL
Toronto Sun Syndicate

VANCOUVER — In the United States, the Watergate crisis is escalating rapidly. Employees of the Committee for the re-election of the President have been convicted of wire tapping and burglary, having been caught in the act at the Democratic headquarters during the last presidential election.

Strangely, in spite of democratic efforts, the Watergate case made little impression on the voters during the election. McGovern tried to call the attention of the electrorate to this incredible piece of political immorality — but he got nowhere. Perhaps his own sloppy handling of the Eagleton affair, and all the troubles which surrounded his selection of a vice-presidential candidate had destroyed his credibility. Perhaps the American electorate is so cynical about its politicians that the Watergate Affair came as no surprise. But whatever the reason, the Republicans got away with it — in the short term.

Now it appears that the Watergate case has become a scandal of major proportions, one which casts dark shadows on the Republicans' hopes for 1976. This is confirmed by the revolt of leading Republicans against the President's handling of the whole affair.

Who Said Go?

There is no doubt that the offences took place. There is no doubt that officials of the President's campaign committee were involved. The question now is simple. Who knew? Who authorized the raid? Mitchell — the president's campaign chairman? Haldeman — The president's senior staff man? The president himself?

It may well be that none of the top men knew of the skullduggery, but these questions have prompted senior Republicans, like Senator Barry Goldwater and Senator Aikens of Vermont, to openly criticize their president.

Simple Virtues

Richard Nixon has always campaigned as a moralist. He supports the simple virtues that he believes built America. (His is the world of Billy Graham, Lawrence Welk, and The Sound of Music). Faith, hope, charity, honor, respect for the law, order in society are his stocks in trade. Let's assume for the moment that he is right. If so his behavior in the Watergate case is most strange.

To begin with — he has had nothing to say about the case until now. Is he not outraged that these acts were committed in his name? If he is, why has he not said so before now.

The people are not stupid. The president's secrecy can only lead them to conclude that he has something sinster to hide. If he and his staff were not involved in the Watergate Affair, then why should he fear the truth?

Richard Nixon is an unusually sure-footed politician, or — more correctly — he has been up to now. He will be hard pressed to work his way gracefully out of this tangle. If he wants to return to the roots of America for an answer, he could look up the words of the great American patriot, Thomas Paine, who said:

"It is with a pious fraud as with a bad action:

It begets a calamitious necessity of going on."

business

Neonex

Neonex International Ltd. reports first quarter net earnings of $201,000 his year, a 42 per cent increase from last year's $142,000. Consolidated sales and revenue rose 35 per cent to $43,582,000 from $32,257,000 last year.

Neonex International is an industrial corporation in a number of consumer markets.

Maclean

Maclean-Hunter Ltd. had a first-quarter profit of just over $1,000,000 or 13.3 cents a share, president Donald Campbell told the annual meeting of shareholders.

That represents an increase of 9.4 per from $969,000 or 12.1 cents a share in the corresponding period of 1972.

Revenue for the quarter increased more than 44 per cent to $24.9 million.

Imperial Oil

Imperial Oil's first-quarter earnings are estimated at $46 million or 36 cents a share, up from $45 million or 35 cent a share a year earlier, shareholders were told today at the annual meeting.

President J. A. Armstrong said crude oil and natural gas liquids production was up 22 per cent to 278,000 barrels a day but the impact on earnings was tempered by higher royalty and exploration costs.

Armstrong told the meeting that delay in building a natural gas pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley to accommodate a crude line for Alaskan crude would not be in the best interests of Canada.

He said he does not believe that both lines can be built at the same time down the Mackenzie unless such a project is undertaken "jointly or separately by the governments of Canada and the United States."

Wosks

Wosks' Ltd. reports sales of $4,035,702 in the first three months of 1973, up 34.7 per cent from sales of $2,996,805 in the first three months of 1972.

Company president Ben Wosk did not have an estimate of this year's first quarter earnings. Wosk told shareholders at the company's annual meeting he expects sales to double in the next five years. He said sales increased to $15.6 million in 1972 from $6.9 million in 1968.

B.C. Turf

British Columbia Turf Ltd. reports 1972 net earnings of $157,064 or 16.5 cents a share compared with net earnings of $144,582 or 15.1 cents a share in 1971. Income rose to $2.4 million in 1972 from $2.2 million in 1971.

Great-West Life

Great-West Life Assurance Co. of Winnipeg reports record sales of $980,576,000 for the three months ended March 31, a 49 per cent rise from the same period in 1972.

Earnings for the three-month period were $1.23 a share compared with $1.35 for the same period last year.

As well, company directors approved payment of the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share on June 1 to shareholders of record at the close of business May 16, 1973.

Gulf Oil

Gulf Oil Corp., among the world's leading producers of petroleum reports an 18.7-per-cent increase in earnings for the first quarter of this year and listed total revenues of more than $2.1 billion.

Gulf told its stockholders that its consolidated net earnings of $165 million so far this year were equal to 80 cents a share, compared with 67 cents a share on earnings of $139 million for the same period last year.

U.S. Steel

U.S. Steel Corp. reports earnings for the first quarter of 1973 more than doubled from the same period a year ago on total revenues of $1.52 billion.

First-quarter income totalled $49 million, or 91 cents a share, compared with net earnings of $19 million, or 35 cents a share, for the 1972 first quarter, U.S. Steel said.

Sales during the first three months of last year topped $1.1 billion.

Financing Squeeze Cited

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

New provincial legislation will make it difficult for companies to raise financing to develop mines, British Columbia Mining Association president W. J. Tough said today.

He said in an interview it will be very difficult to get a loan from a bank to put a mine into operation when the company can not show that the mine will go ahead.

New provincial legislation gives the government power to amend or veto proposed mining operations in B.C.

"How can you get financing if you can not demonstrate you are going to end up with a mine?"

MUST GET LEASE

He said mining is always a gamble but the provincial government has made it an even more risky business.

He said the amendments to the Mineral Act in Bill 44 put development of any new mine into question.

"A company which may have spent many millions of dollars to bring a property to production stage will not be allowed to mine without first obtaining a production lease on the property," Tough said.

"The unsettling factors of this are that it is within the discretion of the minister to grant or refuse a lease, and there is no indication of the terms that may accompany the granting of the lease."

Other legislation introduced in the spring session has created so much uncertainty that exploration and development inevitably will slow down in B.C., he said.

GIVE DETAILS

The full effect of much of the legislation might not be known until the provincial government publishes regulations giving details of the new laws.

The regulations are expected to be handed down over the summer months.

"Until we see the regulations we will not know for sure where we stand," he said.

"This uncertainty is very harmful to the industry."

Hundreds of millions of dollars had been invested in mines in recent years and now some of the investments are in jeopardy because the rules of the game have been changed, he said.

ASSESS EACH OTHER

"It would seem only reasonable to expect that there now will be a period of time during which the industry and government will cautiously assess each other, seeking areas of mutual interest, trust and understanding.

"During this time it is likely that exploration will be reduced and new mine construction will be at a relative standstill."

What will the mining industry do about it?

"We will co-operate with the government, of course — what else can we do? But we will also point out to them the cumulative effect of this new legislation."

He said these are the moves which are of particular concern to the mining industry:

—Bill 42, the Land Commission Act, gives the government power to rule on use of land, could withhold land from mining use.

—Bill 44, Amendments to the Mineral Act, permit the government to issue or withhold a production lease on proposed mines and allow the government to acquire equity in mining ventures. Tough said the industry can not help but wonder if acquisition of shares by the government might not be tied to the granting of a lease.

—Bill 62, Amendments to the 1962 Income Tax Act, raises corporation taxes in B.C. from 10 per cent to 12 per cent.

—Bill 63, a new tax of one-tenth of one per cent on capital employed in business. This corresponds to a similar Ontario tax but there the mining industry is partly exempt, unlike B.C.

—Bill 64, The Mineral Land Tax Act permits the government to levy taxes on crown-granted mineral lands. Owners of the grants will pay $2 per acre if they are located at or near operating mines, from 25 cents to $1 per acre outside designated producing areas.

—Those mines which operate under titles not defined in Bill 64 will be, by year's end, required to pay a tax equivalent as though they had been liable under the bill, Tough said.

In all, the changes are expected to cost the mining industry from $20 million to $25 million a year plus a similar amount from royalty legislation.

700,000 Viets Orphaned

By RAY DICK

SAIGON (CP) — He was only 10 years old but his face carried the lines of a lifetime and his pleading eyes the burden of survival.

Squatting naked on the pavement in the hot afternoon sun, he wanted money, but he seemed almost too weak to ask.

Beside him there, dressed only in a soiled undershirt, was his young brother, stretched on the sidewalk, his eyes closed and his frail body covered with insects.

He didn't move. His eyes remained shut even when some passerby threw coins in their direction.

The youngest was four years old, but had the wasted body and bloated stomach of a starving infant. The older brother was the size of a four-year-old.

It was a scene that would stagger the Canadian mind, but a common occurrence in the poverty-stricken streets of this war-crippled country.

"It is estimated there are 700,000 orphans in South Vietnam," said Gardner Munro, a senior American aid official. "Only about 19,000 of them are in orphanages."

The others are not all homeless waifs, making their living in the streets and sleeping in culverts, packing crates and back alleys where some of them die.

"The Vietnamese family has strong ties," said Munro. "Many of the orphans are being looked after by other families, especially in the country areas."

It is in the cities, mostly Saigon, where the traditional family ties have broken down and children are abandoned to make their own way. Only the strong and the lucky survive.

"We estimate there are about 6,000 homeless children, or those that might as well be homeless, in the streets," Munro said.

Their plight contrasts sharply with the children in the 123 registered orphanages throughout the country, who go to school dressed in neat, clean uniforms and with full stomachs.

But only about 50 per cent of those in the orphanages are true orphans, Munro said. In many cases when one parent is killed, the other will bring the children to the orphanages to be cared for.

Some of them know they are unable to provide and others just don't want to try.

"What we really need is to find ways to make it possible for these children to return to families," he said. "Our primary concern is with the infants."

Munro told of one maternity hospital in Saigon that about a year ago averaged about 60 abandoned babies a month.

Two social workers have been placed in the hospital and now the average is down to five or six a month.

"The social workers quickly learned to spot the mothers who had abandonment in mind," he said. "They didn't knit any baby booties and had no visits from boy-friends.

"All they needed was someone to talk to . . . to give them a little encouragement."

Social welfare programs, along with establishment of day care centres are pre-natal and post-natal clinics across the country, are being stressed by the South Vietnamese government.

Cost of such programs, as with the orphanages, is shared by the government, the U.S. aid program and several international social service organizations.

But the waifs on the streets are a different problem.

Several programs have been started to get the children at least a decent place to sleep and some personal attention.

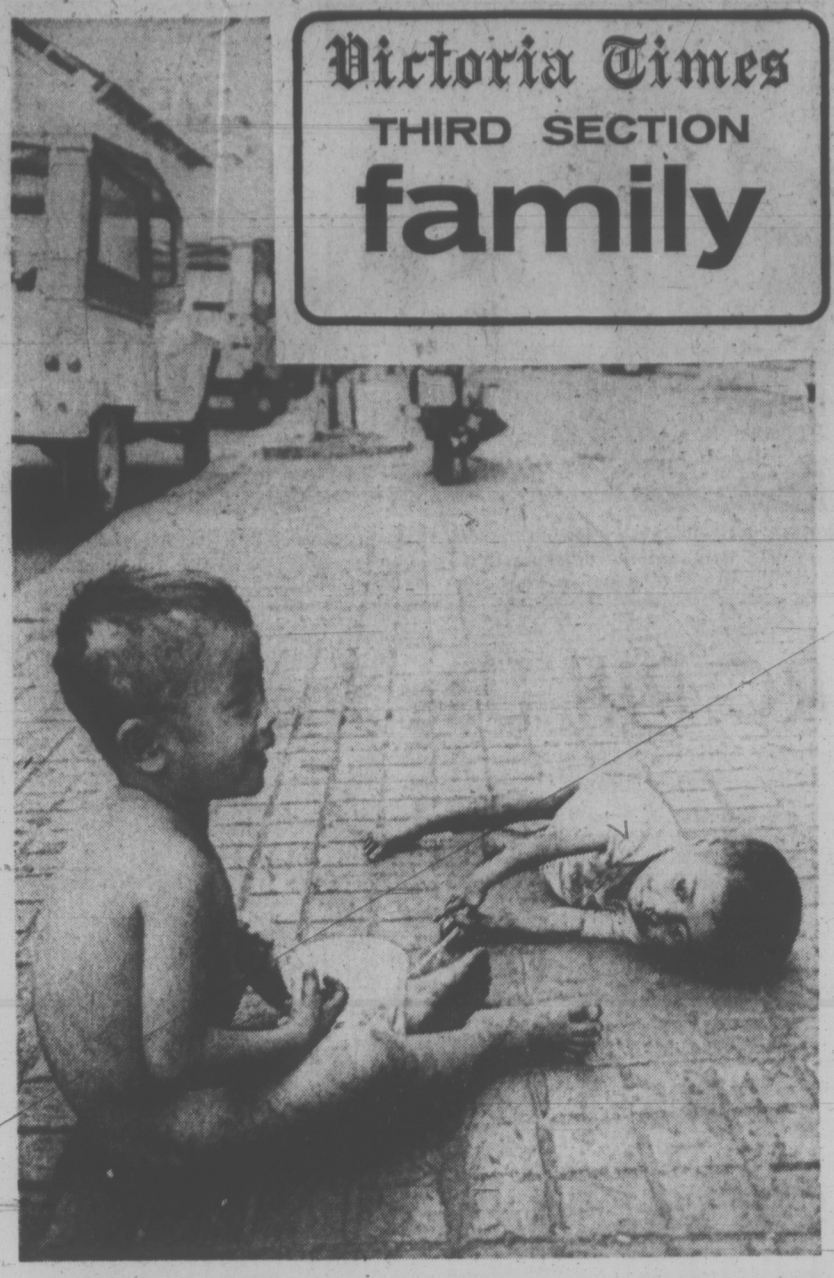
One such program, operated by a New York group, involves getting the homeless boys off the streets and into the shoe-shining business. Shoe-shine kits are provided and shelters are set up so they can sleep indoors.

There are some, however, that even this program can't reach.

One "regular" in downtown Saigon hobbles with the aid of a crutch, one leg amputated above the knee, his face and body horribly burned by napalm. He sells fancy headbands to the few who will buy.

"Nobody could say the level care for all is satisfactory," said Munro. "The war has caused havoc, and has been the first priority of the South Vietnamese government up to now.

"But it is ever so much better than it was when I first came here in 1966."



LIVING ON STREET, these boys beg in Saigon to keep alive. The youngest, four years old, has wasted body and bloated stomach of a starving infant and older brother, 10 years old, is size of a four-year-old. It is estimated there are 700,000 orphans in South Vietnam — with only about 19,000 of them in orphanages. About 6,000 are altogether homeless.

National Body Formed To Champion Youth

TORONTO (CP) — Children have acquired a champion.

The Canadian Council of Children and Youth (CCCY) has begun a complex, long-term program that combines research and pressure for action when that seems necessary.

Margery King, the group's executive secretary, says it has worked as a consciousness-raising organization but now is prepared to take a stance on problems facing kids.

"We will be asking what is society's responsibility to children. The whole issue we're really concerned about is whether we regard them as human beings or as possessions of their parents."

The CCCY is a national voluntary organization formed in 1958 primarily to organize conferences and seminars to bring together social work, medical and education personnel as well as voluntary groups that work with children and youth.

CCCY President Patricia Mac Kay says the council now considers that more is required.

Information in various areas will be collected and appraised and might be handled in a number of ways.

King said: "We might use it as consciousness-raising material for members or decide that this is an area where council should move into active advocacy. We might press for legislative change or new services or for changes in the handling of existing services."

The organization's first project, co-ordinated by Dr. Sydney Segal of Vancouver, is child battering and corporal punishment of children.

King said: "We thought we would start on an obvious area, where children are in jeopardy."

Mrs. MacKay said corporal punishment in schools will be a part of the study.

Another project is a look at the wellbeing of children in "alternative forms of care," such as foster homes or institutions.

Project co-ordinator is Dr. James Albert of Ottawa.

Mrs. MacKay said: "Children rarely have any say as to what happens to them under these circumstances. We will look at who is acting on behalf of the children."

CCCY will study the legal rights of the child. There will be projects on the quality of children's television, on infant health, on professional education and on the child and sports and physical fitness.

Mrs. MacKay said the organization will ask whether children are being expolited in heavily organized junior sports.

"Is there too much emphasis on excellence rather than on physical fitness? King is on the planning body for a meeting to be held at Queen's University in Kingston in May."

King says the CCCY has some federal funds, and hopes to raise more around each specific project.

Poultry Climb Goes Slower

OTTAWA (CP) — At a time when the price of protein from four-legged animals is busting the budgets of many shoppers, penny-wise consumers are looking to two-legged meat — poultry.

Not that the birds have been immune to the general rise of food prices. Poultry prices have climbed by 18.5 per cent in a year — a smaller increase than pork, but a higher rate of advance than beef.

In the last decade, however, poultry prices have advanced by a smaller percentage than other meats — just two per cent compared with 3.6 per cent for all meats, the consumer price index shows.

But in that same period, poultry sold in the shop has altered so it needs different treatment, says Marie Slusar, home economist with the good advisory services of the federal agriculture department.

Take turkey, now that it's not the high-priced Christmas or Thanksgiving seasons. Your roasting timetables may be out of date, Mrs. Slusar says.

Oven times in older cookbooks applied to good old, tasty free-ranging turkeys, those which ran free in the barnyard and grew naturally.

Nowadays, most turkeys in supermarket freezers have been bred and raised by factory methods, strictly confined and force-fed to get to market fast.

Further, they have been injected in breast or legs or both with butter or vegetable oil to make them more plump, succulent and marketable.

After a long series of experiments, Mrs. Slusar has come up with a new list of roasting times for turkey — the big one, at least. Traditionally oven times for an eight-pounder are okay today, but modern 16-pounders need 15 minutes less than traditionally, 20-pounders almost two hours less.

She proposes, at an oven temperature of 325 degrees, 3¾ to 4½ hours for an eight-pound bird, 5¼ to 6 hours for a 16-pounder, 5¾ to 6½ hours for a 20-pounder.

Other discoveries in the turkey tests:

Only about 40 per cent of what you pay for in a turkey by pound is edible. A 20-pound turkey produces only eight pounds of meat, exclusive of skin, giblets and neck.

Weight loss in cooking is about 24 per cent and thawing a frozen bird before that reduces the weight by anywhere from one to four per cent.

To thaw properly before cooking, the turkey should spend five hours a pound in a 40-degree refrigerator temperature.

DIETITIAN ON LINE

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — The executive committee of the Ontario Dietetic Association has approved plans to expand its public information program on food and nutrition.

The committee has decided to offer a question-and-answer food-fact column to Ontario newspapers and to seek financial support to expand a dial-a-dietician service.

Ann Diamond, president of the 600-member association, said: "We have been concerned about the state of public knowledge about food and nutrition and we wish to do something positive about it."

She said several newspapers have indicated support for the food and nutrition column.

SWIMSUIT RENTERS SHOW TRUE COLORS

A swim at the Crystal Pool may sooth housewives' nerves but it can't do much for their egos if they wear more than a size 12 and need to rent a bathing suit.

Most women like to keep their clothing size, like their age, a secret. But at the Crystal all are revealed in their true colors.

Bathing suits are color coded for size starting at a slimming shade of brown for wearers of size 10. As sizes grow larger, colors grow brighter, culminating in bright pink for size 18.

The man responsible for all those size 18s hiding in the deep end of the pool is Crystal Pool's manager Bill Young.

Young said Tuesday that he assigned each size a color because it would be more "convenient for staff" and chose colors arbitrarily from a catalogue.

He didn't know that, although size 10s may enjoy wearing bright colors, most of the larger sizes would prefer a slimming, dark color — and their anonymity.

High-Kickers and Gun-Slingers Find Lots of Work in Florida

OCALA, Fla. (UPI) — A man can still hire out as a gunfighter in Florida, if he's fast enough on the draw.

And — despite the topless go-go craze — there is still a demand for cloth-bundled girl dancers, provided they can kick high enough.

Ask Bob Chambers, who drove a Greyhound bus for 20 years, worked for a while as a special state investigator and then strapped on a sixgun.

Chambers, who at 59 bears a striking resemblance to actor Richard Boone, today is "top gun" at a Florida tourist attraction.

How does a bus driver turn gunslinger?

"I had to get a special rig (holster) made to outdraw them," says Chambers, who now trains the other gunfighters at six-gun territory.

"I use a low-slung, Paladin-type rig."

He also recruits young men, mostly from the local area, to stage hourly gunfights in the streets of a make-believe frontier town.

"There's a certain fascination to it," said Chambers.

"We try to get boys with athletic experience so we can teach them to fall from a roof without hurting themselves. We teach them the spin fall and even try to teach them the difference in going down by a blast from a .45-calibre revolver or a sawed-off shotgun."

On a recent rainly day, the importance of that kind of training was clearly demonstrated when the town marshal shot Don Hegsmith up on the roof of the general store.

The script called for Hegsmith to fall down into the street. He did, but he sprained an ankle in the process.

"It's a lot of fun," said Chambers. "All of us have a little kid in us."

The kids might like the gunplay, all right, but in the "Palace Saloon" Molly Parks has something going for their dads.

Molly, a petite redhead who teams with her mother, Vickie, is helping keep alive the art of can-can dancing. Like Chambers, she recruits mostly local talent and teaches them herself.

"The can-can is not hard, as compared to some modern jazz dances, but it very strenuous," said Molly, who has been dancing with her British-born mother in many forms of show business since she was four months old.

Molly sees family-style outdoor attractions, which are multiplying all over Florida and elsewhere, as a new hope for entertainers.

She and her mother are putting together seven different shows, with 35 to 40 dancers, for appearances at similar western attractions in several states.

BESIEGED BY BABOONS

WINDSOR, England (CP) — During a visit to the Windsor Safari Park in Berkshire, Labor MP Neil Kinnock was besieged by a herd of baboons. As he sat helpless inside his car, the hungry animals devoured the windshield wipers, sidelights and rear registration plate. Kinnock plans to raise in Parliament the matter of compensation for zoo visitors in similar circumstances.

RAW VEGETABLES LINKED TO DEATHS

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bacteria on uncooked vegetables may be linked to the high rate of often fatal infections among severely burned or acutely ill persons, says a local researcher.

Dr. Spyros Kominos, chief of microbiology at Mercy Hospital, says tests show vegetables like celery, tomatoes and cucumbers are laden with bacteria known as pseudomonas aeruginosa.

Though harmless to the general public, it normally infects 60 to 70 per cent of patients suffering from severe burns, leukemia and other critical maladies, he said.

The infection has been "completely eliminated" among such patients at Mercy Hospital since they stopped receiving raw vegetables in salads more than a year ago he said.

Nixon Team Faked Ad

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon's re-election committee financed an elaborate campaign last May to give a distorted view of the U.S. public's response to the mining of Haiphong harbor, it has been learned.

The campaign included paying for telegrams to be sent to the White House and the placing of a deceptive, apparently illegal $4,400 ad in the New York Times on May 17.

On May 10, White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler said that telegrams, letters and telephone calls were running 5 or 6 to 1 in support of the president's action and cited them as an indication of "substantial support" of the mining.

One former Nixon campaign official said Tuesday that the Committee for the Re-election of the President was "totally mobilized for the biggest piece of deception — we never do anything honestly. Imagine, the president sending himself telegrams, patting himself on the back."

ENTIRE STAFF

Another former Nixon campaign official said that the Haiphong mining campaign "put the entire staff in overdrive for two weeks . . . the work included petition drives, organizing rallies, bringing people in buses to Washington, organizing calls to the White House, getting voters to call their congressmen."

"We felt the Haiphong decision could make or break the president," the official said.

Apparently among the participants in the drive were at least two of the Watergate conspirators, Frank Sturgis and Bernard Barker.

The two, according to sources in Miami, showed up uninvited at a Cuban exile meeting and attempted to take over plans for organizing a demonstration there in support of the mining.

Sturgis later told a Washington Post reporter that he drove the lead truck in a convoy that participated in the demonstration.

$100 BILLS

At least $8,400 in cash campaign funds, mostly in $100 bills, was spent on the drive. This expenditure has not been reported to the General Accounting Office as required by law.

The expenditures were authorized by Jeb Stuart Magruder, who was deputy Nixon campaign manager under John Mitchell at the time, according to government sources.

Magruder reportedly has told prosecutors that he, along with former attorney-general Mitchell and presidential counsel John Dean, had approved the bugging of the Democrat's Watergate headquarters.

The ad in the New York Times, entitled The People vs. The New York Times, criticized a Times' editorial opposing the mining.

The ad was signed by 10 people and gave the appearance of representing citizens' support of the president's controversial decision.

Philip Joanou, the former executive vice-president of the November Group, which handled the Nixon committee's advertising, said Tuesday that the ad was paid for with 44 $100 bills sent from

10% HIKE SEEN IN GAS PRICE

Times News Services

A Montreal oil company executive said Tuesday he expects gasoline prices across Canada to increase by 10 to 12 per cent in the near future.

M. R. Boyer, vice-president of marketing for Calex, said transport costs have increased by 300 per cent in the past 15 months.

During this period, his company had to increase the price of gas by three cents a gallon.

He said he expects other major gasoline marketers to make further increases soon.

J. E. Jarrell of Shell Canada said that although his company has not yet raised its prices, it will soon reduce the amount of subsidies allowed to dealers in certain regions of Quebec and the Ottawa Valley where price reductions were instituted a short time ago.

In Vienna, 11 of the world's oil-producing countries have issued a 10-day ultimatum to the Western companies that market their oil to come up with a formula to break a price deadlock.

In the U.S., Sun Oil Co. announced Tuesday in Philadelphia that it will immediately begin rationing gasoline supplies for dealers, distributors and commercial customers.

Sun, the 10th largest U.S. oil company, said a shortage of crude oil forced it to put a "gasoline allocation system" into effect.

PRITTIE WINS POST

Burnaby Mayor Bob Prittie, a former New Democratic Party member of the House of Commons, has won a civil service competition for the post of assistant deputy minister in the department of municipal affairs.

Prittie will resign as mayor of Burnaby to take the new position.

Reds At Edge Of City

Times News Services

PHNOM PENH — Hundreds of refugees poured across the Mekong River to Phnom Penh today as Communist forces occupied positions directly opposite the city.

Refugees said the Communists were digging bunkers on the river bank at the village of Arei Khsat, only 1.7 mles from the centre of the capital.

Observers said the Communists could make use of the river bank as a superb site from which to shell the capital if they were able to hold out there until darkeness.

Cambodian planes bombed and strafed the village throughout the afternoon as crowds gathered on this side of the river to watch the air strikes.

By late afternoon, the din of fighting between ground troops was still going on and could be clearly heard here.

Dry Spell . . . Ready For Worst

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

The price tag on the dry spell could be a whopper on Vancouver Island and other parts of the province.

Ruinous forest fires, dead fish, poor crops and dry wells may be the cost of below-average rain and snow since October.

Precipitation recorded at Gonzales for the seven-month period was 7.44 inches below average. At Victoria International Airport it was 3.24 inches below average.

So far this month moisture precipitation at Gonzales is .53 inches below average and at the airport, .29 inches below.

Except for December, when torrential downpours on the holiday weekend changed the balanee, each month's recordings since last October have been below average.

Forestry officials, conservationists and farmers Tuesday predicted serious trouble if the unusually dry conditions prevail too long.

A spokesman for the B.C. Forest Service said it's going to be a "dicey" forest fire season.

"We're hoping for the best but preparing for the worst."

Because of the record fall of snow and rain that preceded it, he said the 1972 season had been an unusually light one.

"It was a good year," he said, "with only 1,903 fires, compared to 1970 when, because of conditions similar to those we face now, there were more than 4,000 fires."

Even in the "good year," fires consumed an estimated 64,400 acres, costing the department about $2.3 million and another $1.7 million outlay by the industry and other agencies.

He said the 1970 figures were staggering — 260,958 acres burned out, a cost of $9,166,167 to the department plus several millions by the industry and others.

"It may well be a grim summer," the spokesman added. "The rivers and streams are very, very low. We have arranged for chartered water bombers and patrol craft. This could well be a bad one."

He said several fires have already been fought, some of them small, but still providing "some pretty tell-tale facts." The forest season officially begins Tuesday.

Concern for the drying-out streams was also voiced by

POWER SHORTAGE LOOMS

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba Hydro is preparing for a power shortage next fall and winter, hydro chairman Len Bateman told the legislature' public utilities committee Tuesday.

Bateman said this will be "an expensive year" in terms of thermal power generation that will be required to make up for lack of water power due to dry conditions.

Hydro is working to get its thermal generating stations into first-class condition for the winter.

Bateman said the entire power situation is being reviewed, and hydro will decide soon whether to increase Lake Winnipeg's level by blocking one of its Nelson River outlet channels, possibly by sinking barges in it.

This would increase the lake's water table to provide water for winter release through the Nelson River power dams.

Manitoba Hydro also is surveying the province's neighbors to see what can be done in terms of buying outside power, Bateman said.

Chaos Ahead

TOKYO (UPI) — Labor unions today called a 72-hour general transportation strike for Thursday, one day ahead of schedule, threatening to plunge Japan in its worst economic chaos in decades.

A commuter revolt against a showdown by railroad workers Tuesday led to bloody rioting at dozens of stations.

Scores of passengers and railroad employees were injured and 130 arrested by about 18,000 riot police.

About six million passengers were affected as 13 of Japan's rail lines suspended service because of damage.

Thursday's walkout will include government employees, communications workers and employees of Japan Air Lines and All Nippon Airways. The general walkout seemed inevitable after Premier Kakuei Tanaka's government refused to accept civil servants' demands for the right to strike by government employees.

HEY GEORGE! THEY'LL YELL

OCEAN SHORES, Wash. (UPI) — The city fathers of this town have declared Friday as "Undiscovery Day," marking the 181st anniversary of the day Capt. George Vancouver sailed past Ocean Shores without discovering it.

Vancouver was en route to Nootka Sound, on Vancouver Island. To celebrate "Undiscovery Day," residents will go to the beach at midnight and yell in unison, "Hey George!"

Navy Aid Sought

LONDON (UPI) — Angry British fishermen sought talks today with the government that may include a plea for naval support following the latest clashes in the "Cod War" between British trawlers and Icelandic gunboats. Political sources said the British government was taking the incidents very seriously, but remained opposed to the navy being called in to protect the trawlers.

Work Beats Welfare —Levi

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Most people would rather work than be on welfare, B.C. Social Services Minister Norm Levi told a federal-provincial conference here today.

He cited the need for flexibility in social assistance programs to allow provinces to determine the needs of their people and urged the federal government to speed up a timetable to increase Canada Pension Plan benefits and a guaranteed minimum income for the disadvantaged.

Alberta agreed with federal proposals to beef up current plans, but advocated holding the line on suggestions for a universal guaranteed annual income and other broad approaches to social assistance.

In a position paper, Alberta Health Minister Neil Crawford said he supported the concept that individuals are responsible to themselves, their families and society to provide a living.

Increases in family allowance benefits, Canada Pension Plan provisions and income supplements to handicapped and disabled should be provided only for those incapable of taking care of themselves.

But the three Western New Democrat administrations — Manitoba and Saskatchewan as well as British Columbia stressed the need for a broad overhaul of present patchwork social assistance plans.

"Some of us are prevented by our political ideologies from doing anything," Levi said in an obvious dig at more conservative governments.

But "men of good will" should be able to come up with a workable system that would alow people a decent and dignified living.

Len Taylor of Saskatchewan said economic poverty "can and ought to be ended" in the country immediately.

He called for new approaches to the whole area of social welfare policy and said he hoped federal proposals to change the system would not get bogged down in discussion.

"While we sit and talk, many of our people suffer."

Welfare Minister Rene Toupin of Manitoba, in the most political statement, called for a federal policy of full employment together with a stronger social security system.

His government's programs to redistribute income, provide low-income housing and create jobs had helped keep the province's unemployment level low, he said.

Quebec's Claude Castonguay said any review of welfare systems should not set up distinctions between persons able to work, those unable to work and the rest of the population.

If programs were set up that enabled directors to classify benefit recipients it would be a fundamental departure from the approach that Quebec would like to see, he said.

MALARIA STRIKES VIET CANADIANS

By JAMES ANDERSON
Times Correspondent

SAIGON — An isolated outpost on a Viet Cong-controlled area of South Vietnam's Central Highlands has become a major medical headache for the International Commission of Control and Supervision.

Malaria has struck three Canadian and four other truce observers in the past two months at Duc Co, a former U.S. special forces camp near the Laotian border 225 miles northeast of Saigon.

Two of the Canadian officers have been sent home.

The problem is expected to get worse with the arrival of the rainy season in the next few months.

Falciprum malaria, the variety involved at Duc Co, causes a high fever which spurts up every three days.

Col. P. K. Tucker, chief medical officer of the Canadian contingent, says that it takes at least 19 days to cure the disease. Treatment requires large doses of quinine and other drugs which are fairly toxic in themselves.

The debilitating, mosquito-borne fever, caused by a parasite which attacks the red blood cells, is endemic in the area and probably widespread among the Communist forces around Duc Co.

The disease can sometimes recur periodically for the rest of the victim's life. It can be fatal in a small fraction of cases even if treated promptly.

Although the Canadians in such areas take pills every day to help ward off the disease, Col. Tucker says the only real answer would be an effective mosquito control program.

Teachers Hire Women's Protector

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — A full-time protector and promoter of women's rights in education will be appointed by the B.C. Teachers' Federation.

In a move that symbolizes support for a task force report which has found discrimination against women in all levels of education, the BCTF annual convention in Vancouver voted Tuesday to hire the extra staff member for a two-year term.

The staff member may be a male or female.

The 600 convention delegates approved five of seven major recommendations of the task force after more than two hours of debate that stirred more laughter, more booing and more emotion than any other on the agenda. (Other stories on Page 3.)

Greatest antagonism was aroused over a recommendation that, when all other qualifications are equal, females should be appointed to administrative posts in preference to males "until an equitable distribution of men and women in administrative positions exist."

The recommendation was soundly defeated.

In defending that motion, task force chairman Dorothy Glass told delegates that statistics overwhelmingly prove that men are preferred to women in positions of authority and strong action must be taken to correct this injustice.

Both men and women teachers strongly disagreed with Glass, calling the motion "reverse discrimination" which would exchange one form of sexual prejudice for another.

Much of the debate over appointment of full-time women's rights workers revolved around finances but one male teacher closed that discussion when he asked: "Do you really think spending one per cent of our budget to improve the status of 53 per cent of our membership is too much?"

One Victoria teacher, Corrie Reagan, was well-received in a long speech opposing the whole principle of the status of women report.

Reagan, a teacher at Esquimalt Senior Secondary School and a past-president of the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association, said appointment of a special women's worker would split the federation.

If specific cases of discrimination are found, she said, the teachers' federation as a whole should use the Human Rights Act to fight the specific case.

After much argument the convention supported a recommendation advising the department of education and local school boards that the BCTF is concerned about textbooks and other materials "that consistently show women and men in stereotyped roles."

Many teachers, especially at the secondary level, opposed the motion saying it constituted "censorship" and "book burning."

It would involve, they said, exclusion of many literary masterpieces from school libraries and English courses.

Other motions recommended that every school board in B.C. examine the status of female students and teachers in their district and called for a BCTF program to ensure that "the problem of social and sex stereotyping" be examined in the training of teachers, guidance counsellors and librarians.

The other defeated recommendation called for research to determine if, and why, fewer girls than boys participate in sports programs at the school level.

The BCTF task force on the status of women has been working for more than two years and presented the convention with an 18-page report outlining 46 specific recommendations to improve the position of women in B.C. education.
